China Vows to Follow Mao Policy; Assails Rightist and Soviet Views

BY FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Sept. 16—In a major joint editorial in Peking's papers, China today affirmed its commitment to the policies of the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung and said he had "adjudged" the Chinese people to "act according to the principles laid down."

The moderately worded editorial, the first since Mao's death last week, appeared to be another attempt to reassure China's 800 million people that there would be no important changes in policy or leadership in the immediate future.

Last week in announcing his death, Peking called on the Chinese people to "carry on the cause left behind by Chairman Mao." The repeated appearance this week of China's surviving senior leaders at mourning services in Peking, with the leaders arrayed in precise party rank, also seemed designed to convey an impression of continuity.

Over the year, China has been shaken by the loss not only of Chairman Mao but also by the death of Prime Minister Chou En-lai and its equivalent to a head of state, Chu Teh. In addition, the country has also been engulfed in a bitter anti-rightist political campaign and has suffered a devastating earthquake.

Criticism of Rightists

Today's editorial called for continuing the current criticism of rightists in the party, a favorite target of Chairman Mao and his supporters among China's so-called radicals. But at the same time, in carefully balanced form, the editorial also enjoined the Chinese people to "rally very closely round the party Central Committee," a theme of the "party moderates."

Analysts here noted that the editorial was couched largely in terms of continuing to study Mao's works rather than pursuing "struggle," which would indicate a more active phase of political action.

25,000 at Mao Service At Bank in Hong Kong

HONG KONG, Sept. 16—About 25,000 people, including Sir Murray Maclehoze, the Governor of this British colony, paid their last respects to Mao Tse-tung today at mourning services held in the Bank of China here.

The bank, a Communist enclave between the Hilton Hotel and the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, was surrounded by wreaths sent by foreign diplomats and businessmen who deal with Peking.

Small groups entered the bank in succession to bow three times before a large portrait of Mao that bore the inscription "We mourn with deepest grief for the great leader and teacher Chairman Mao Tse-tung."

Carter's China Adviser Outlines A Prospective Policy on Peking

By PETER GROSE

The death of Mao Tse-tung has given sudden urgency to a debate in the ranks of this country's China experts about how the United States should proceed in attempting to normalize relations with Peking.

Among Government policy planners and wider circles of scholars and "think tank" specialists who often consult with official policymakers, two specific issues are under close scrutiny: the search for a workable formula to reconcile this country's commitment to Taiwan after some future recognition of China, and the possibility of easing into some form of military cooperation with Peking, through sales of strategic technology or even military materiel.

The latest formal entry into the debate is a paper prepared by a Harvard law professor, Jerome A. Cohen, contained in the October issue of Foreign Affairs quarterly, published today, entitled "A China Policy for the Next Administration."

Mr. Cohen has been a consultant on China policy to the Democratic Presidential candidate, Jimmy Carter, though the author stressed in an interview that there was no claim that Mr. Carter concurred in the policy proposals put forward in the article. The paper was written before Mao's death last week, but its basic arguments hold.

Mr. Cohen believes that the United States can devise a "new type of guaranty" for Taiwan to replace the formal security pact that would have to be invalidated by giving diplomatic recognition to Peking. Chinese authorities insist that they have the "right" to use force in reunifying Taiwan with the mainland, yet they also give clear indications that they have no intention of doing so.

One way of skirting this dilemma, Mr. Cohen suggests, might be "a Sino-American agreement declaring the international waters and airspace between Taiwan and mainland China a bilateral zone of peace and binding the two sides not to resort to force in this international area, but without spelling out the implications of this move for Taiwan."

Since the United States Government and electorate would insist on reiterating a longstanding interest in Taiwan's security, Mr. Cohen advocates a "solemn policy declaration by the President" conveying a national commitment, possibly strengthened by a Congressional resolution "authorizing in advance any action in defense of Taiwan that might, at the discretion of the President, prove necessary."

He suggests continuing military sales to Taiwan through private auspices. These proposals are more forthcoming toward the Taiwan regime than many American scholars, such as Allen S. Whiting, a former State Department official now on the faculty of the University of Michigan, believe necessary. Mr. Cohen argued, however, that Taiwan enjoyed continued strong support in this country, which no responsible political leader should underestimate.

The proposals for a cautious form of military cooperation with Peking, in part to compensate for the present overwhelming superiority of Soviet military might, are even more controversial.

9,000 More Are Left Homeless In New Tremors in Northern Italy

GENOVA, Italy, Sept. 16 (Reuters)—Over 20,000 more people are now homeless after a new series of earth tremors in the Liguria area of northern Italy, officials said today. Powerful tremors yesterday followed four and a half months of sporadic quakes set off by an earthquake on May 12, which nearly 1,000 people were killed and 400,000 left homeless. At least four people died in the region today, three from heart attacks. The new tremors destroyed hundreds of buildings and left many of the inhabitants unwilling to start a new life from the ruins of their towns and villages scattered over the Friuli region. Heavy rain and thunderstorms added to the misery of about 40,000 people camping in tents, caravans, aluminum huts and makeshift shelters. Fear of new tremors, the approaching winter and the bitter experience of seeing four months of hard construction work crash to the ground have prompted thousands of people to look for new homes in safer areas. The Government has allocated hotels, boarding houses and new apartment buildings in several small Adriatic vacation resorts and some 8,000 people have already reported to local officials at the nearby seaside village of Lignano. A young woman stood in a muddy field in Gemona today, stared at her earthquake-flattened hometown and said: "We want to leave Gemona now and forever." She was lining up with dozens of other people outside a makeshift registration center.

HE WILL BE INACTIVE FOR 2-MONTH TREATMENT

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, Sept. 16 (UPI)—President Tito has canceled all official duties for two months on the advice of doctors treating him for acute liver disease, Government sources said today. The cancellations was a visit by Averell Harriman, who had been scheduled to visit him on behalf of Democratic Presidential candidate, Jimmy Carter. Marshal Tito's physicians ordered complete rest for the 84-year-old leader during treatment of the unspecified liver ailment, the sources said. They said President Tito's health was a matter of serious concern, adding that the doctors did not want to take chances. Despite his doctors' advice on Sept. 8, he took a complete rest, the next day he took the visiting Rumanian President, Nicolae Ceausescu hunting in the forests of Slovenia. He then, Marshal Tito has postponed his visits by the French President, Valéry Giscard d'Estaing and Queen Margrethe of Denmark, both scheduled for this month, and a visit by the East German Communist Party leader, Erich Honecker, in November.

Looks Like a War Zone "There are six of us and we can't take another night in the tent, another night in wet bedclothes, another night with these tremors and storms," she said. Gemona, where 300 people died in the May earthquake, looked like a war zone. Soldiers worked around the clock to clear the roads of rocks and fallen walls. Giuseppe Marcora, a farmer, said he stayed on after the May earthquake, "but now we want to leave." "We don't know what is going to happen or where we will live," he said. "All we care about now is a safe roof and a warm bed." "But what am I going to do with our cows, which have given us milk all these years?" he asked sadly. The farmer's family and his 26 cows have been staying in an army camp since the May quake razed his 300-year-old farmhouse.

American Is Abducted in Argentina

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 16 (AP)—The 19-year-old daughter of a Mennonite missionary from the United States has been abducted from her home by armed men, her father said today. John D. Erb, who has been working with the Mennonite Church in Argentina for 25 years, said his daughter, Patricia, was taken from the family's suburban home late last night. He said she had apparently been involved in leftist politics at the National University here. In the last two months more than 300 people have been reported abducted from their homes or offices by men in civilian clothes, some of them describing themselves as policemen. At least 100 people have been found dead in the last month in Buenos Aires and other cities. Mr. Erb said he was at the family's suburban home eating a snack about midnight when he heard the doorbell. He asked who was there and when there was no answer, he opened the door. "About three men with guns forced their way in and made me put my hands up," he related. Two other men entered another way. Mr. and Mrs. Erb, a woman guest and the Erbs' two other children were bound with rope and blindfolded. Mr. Erb said that the men were looking for someone named Cindy and that Patricia, in response to questioning, said she was the person they sought. Action Attributed to Rightists WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 (AP)—The State Department confirmed today that an American, Patricia Erb, had been abducted in Buenos Aires, but it declined to give further details. Informed sources said the abduction was believed to be the work of rightists since the left usually publicizes its kidnapping exploits.

Hunted Terrorist Reported in Yugoslavia

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 (AP)—American officials believe that the international terrorist known as Carlos was in Yugoslavia last week and that the Yugoslavs knew it but made no attempt to capture him. According to the State Department, both the United States and West Germany alerted the Yugoslavs to the arrival of the terrorist, a 27-year-old Venezuelan whose real name is Ilich Ramirez Sanchez. The department said the United States Embassy in Belgrade had conveyed United States displeasure that Yugoslavia did not make efforts to apprehend Carlos. The Yugoslav Government denied that it had known that Carlos was in the country last week. Carlos, who has been sought in 12 countries, is believed to have led the kidnapping of all ministers attending a meeting of the Organization of Petroleum-Exporting Countries in Vienna last December. He is also believed to have organized the hijacking of a French airliner to Uganda in June that ended with the Israeli rescue of hostages from the airport of Entebbe. A State Department spokesman said West Germany and the United States had had informed Belgrade about the presence of the terrorist in Yugoslavia "at the beginning of last week." "We believed the information was highly reliable," Mr. Brown remarked. Asked whether the Yugoslavs had responded, Mr. Brown replied, "They said they had no information to indicate that Carlos had been in Yugoslavia."

fears that the terrorists had come as an assassination team. American interest in the incident has been strong not only because Carlos is generally regarded as the most dangerous terrorist, but because of another dispute between Washington and Belgrade. Since the hijacking by Croatian separatists of an American airliner last Friday, Yugoslavia has been accusing Washington of pursuing a policy of harboring critics of President Tito's Government. Statements by American and Yugoslav officials on the Carlos case have been directly contradictory. A Yugoslav spokesman said today: "Yugoslav security authorities and the Yugoslav section of Interpol, despite careful checks, have not established the presence of those persons in Yugoslavia." Apart from the State Department complaint in Washington, an American Embassy official asked the Yugoslav Government over the weekend whether it could explain the available evidence, it was learned.

Agents Reported Arrival by Air By MALCOLM W. BROWNE Special to The New York Times BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, Sept. 16—Western sources here reported today that Carlos arrived in Belgrade on Sept. 6 on a commercial flight from Algiers with five accomplices, two of them West Germans. Carlos was reportedly observed at Belgrade airport by both West German and Yugoslav police agents. When West German diplomats asked the Yugoslav Foreign Ministry to arrest the terrorist and his colleagues, the Yugoslavs were said to have replied that they were under "close surveillance." But after four days, Carlos and his associates reportedly left on a flight to Iraq. West German and Yugoslav agents were again on hand at the airport. During Carlos's stay in Belgrade, several embassies were on alert because of

Article, Allon Outlines Steps Withdraw From Most Arab Territories Overrun in 1967

Foreign Minister, Yigal Allon, used an Israeli withdrawal from the Arab territory occupied in war and the creation of a joint Arab-Palestinian entity in demarcations on the West Bank of the river and in the Gaza Strip.

Article published in the October Foreign Affairs magazine, Mr. Allon said Israel was willing to make concessions as long as they for defensible borders with a minimum of strategic depth.

Allon said the precise boundaries fixed by negotiation with the Arab states, but his article included the general outlines of the plan he suggested.

Withdrawals proposed by Mr. Allon roughly to earlier proposals by Israeli leaders, but it was said that the proposals were used by a map. The significance of the proposals was in their publication, under Mr. Allon's name, in a column read by American Government officials who have been critical of new negotiating ideas emanating from Israel.

The map shows two ellipses on the West Bank of the Jordan covering rough-ly mountainous areas of Samaria and Judea, excluding Jerusalem. A corridor would link the two areas with the Jordan at Jericho.

The Gaza Strip would remain in control of the Israelis immediately west of the Jordan.

The Gaza Strip would also be under Israeli control, but not the entire Gaza Strip.

her than returning to Egyptian Gaza would be part of the proposed Palestinian-Jordanian entity, and have guaranteed road access to the West Bank area. This access would be a corridor, however.

Mr. Allon's proposed line of withdrawal runs from a point northeast of the Golan Heights roughly parallel to the traditional Egyptian border to the west of the Dead Sea. From there, it would run roughly parallel to the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, and provide Israeli control in the Sinai Peninsula, with the aim of a repetition of Egyptian blockade of the Strait of Tiran between the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aqaba.

Golan Heights, the proposed withdrawal runs just west of the 1967 lines, retaining an area that was vital to Israel to protect it from shelling or invasion.

Allon wrote that Israel had no desire to incorporate a large Arab population into its permanent territory but that it would enable its army to check Arab invaders until civilian could be mobilized.

Go and U.S. Set Stable for Treaty Prisoner Exchange

CITY, Sept. 16 (AP)—The Government of the United States and Mexico agreed to complete negotiations on a draft treaty on prisoner exchange.

United States-Mexican state-ments said that the purpose of the treaty would be to allow Americans arrested in Mexico and Mexicans arrested in the United States to return to their own countries.

United States Embassy estimates that there are 573 Americans in Mexican custody and 2,000 Mexicans in U.S. jails.

Government said that representatives of the two governments met Tuesday in Mexico City to continue discussions of aspects between the two countries.

Representatives of the Mexican Secretariat and the United States Embassy agreed on a schedule for exchanging proposed texts no later than the first week of October and to continue negotiations and negotiating the treaty for consideration by the governments during the second half of the month.

Government said that the objective would be to complete negotiation of a treaty by the end of the month. The statement said that the treaty would have to be approved by the respective legislatures and a treaty would be signed by the respective executives.

Japanese Parliament Meets in a Pre-Election Session, With Further Bickering Likely Among Ruling P

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, Sept. 16—The Japanese Parliament was convened in extraordinary session today to consider a package of crucial fiscal measures.

The indications were that the deliberations would also serve as prelude to an important general election late this year and to further squabbling within the ruling but divided Liberal Democratic Party.

The session's first day, which seemed to set the tone, was consumed by disagreements over how long it should run. By nightfall it appeared that the participants in the session would not get down to substantive debate until next week. The session began fewer than 15 hours after Prime Minister Takeo Miki shuffled his 20-man Cabinet, whose members had held their posts since December 1974, setting a postwar record.

The Cabinet changes were part of the intricate political maneuverings of recent weeks as the 69-year-old Mr. Miki struggled to hold his leadership of the conservative party that has ruled Japan for 21 years.

Party vs. Popular Support

Mr. Miki, who heads only a minor party faction, was chosen by Liberal Democratic leaders almost two years ago as an interim, compromise party head. In the face of a growing number of intraparty attacks on his leadership in recent months, Mr. Miki has so far managed to retain his position.

He has talked widely of the need to press the investigation into the multimillion-dollar Lockheed Aircraft bribery scandal, even though the trail of evidence has led to former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, among other prominent Liberal Democrats. As one result, the percentage of those Japanese who approve of Mr. Miki's work has risen to 45 in at least one public-opinion survey.

However, as another result of Mr.

Miki's stand on the Lockheed affair, his support within the party, never enthusiastic to begin with, has crumbled further. Two-thirds of the Liberal Democratic members of Parliament signed a petition against him; he was booed and jeered at a meeting of local party officials. And he has had to plead for party support, unheard of for leaders of his party, who have traditionally represented powerful factions.

Mr. Miki suffered a serious blow during his Cabinet-shuffling yesterday. Raizo Matsuno, Mr. Miki's own candidate for the powerful post of secretary general of the party, was rejected by its executive council. The Prime Minister was forced to accept Tsuneo Uchida, an economic expert who has been a member of a staunch anti-Miki party faction led by Masayoshi Ohira.

The negotiations that Mr. Miki was forced to enter into yesterday to fill the Cabinet slots were so time-consuming that he missed the wedding of his eldest son, Hirofumi. Behind-the-scenes wrangling is expected to continue during the special session of Parliament in the weeks ahead leading to a Liberal Democratic convention next month, when Mr. Miki's party opponents are expected to push publicly for his ouster from the ship.

At a news conference this morning, Mr. Miki reiterated his desire to party into the coming national elections to the lower house. At the time, the Prime Minister implied, first time, some possible that issue.

By law, the elections must be held early December, but first the Government must seek passage of three pieces of fiscal legislation. The important would authorize the spending of $11.8 billion in Government help cover the budget deficit.

Nuclear Power Program Controversy in Sweden Gives New Jolt to Already Threatened Social Democrats

By BERNARD WEINRAUB

Special to The New York Times
SOLM, Sept. 16—Sweden's ruling Social Democratic Party, fighting for 44 years in power, has been hit by the emergence of a controversy over the government's nuclear power program. A nationwide election set for Sunday with opinion polls predicting a narrow victory for the opposition—a group of three opposi-

and intense debate, rarely seen in Sweden, that has blurred party affiliations and placed Prime Minister Olof Palme on the defensive.

The election debate was raised by Thorbjorn Fälldin, a blunt 50-year-old sheepfarmer and chairman of the Center Party, who is likely to be Prime Minister if the opposition wins.

Political Reputation at Stake

Mr. Fälldin, staking his political reputation on the energy issue, has said that he would eventually shut down Sweden's five nuclear reactors and kill the Government's program to maintain a total of 13 reactors by 1985. The Government's nuclear program is designed to supply 40 percent of Sweden's electricity within a decade, reducing Sweden's dependence on imported oil and making the nation one of the world's biggest per capita consumers of nuclear energy.

At one political rally after another Mr. Fälldin has stressed that he does not believe nuclear energy is needed to fill Sweden's energy requirements. Instead, he urges that money committed to nuclear power be invested in a large energy saving program, as well as subsidies for improving insulation in homes and factories, and research on solar, geothermic, wind and other alternative energy sources.

Mr. Fälldin's opposition to nuclear power has clearly struck a nerve in an environment-conscious nation whose voters are worried about the risk of radioactive contamination and nuclear accidents. Moreover Mr. Fälldin's theme—that nuclear energy is wasteful and dangerous—seems to underline a persistent fear among Swedes: that the energy program will somehow diminish Sweden's political neutrality and involve the nation in deepening economic and military commitments.

Recently Mr. Palme, the Social Democratic leader in office since 1969, engaged in an unusually bitter television confrontation with Mr. Fälldin, telling that his energy-saving program was a "fake." Mr. Palme added: "Your policy would result in mass unemployment, difficulties in meeting our economic commitments to pensioners and tough restrictions on people's everyday lives."

Mr. Palme, harassed and on the defensive because of party defections, has urged that the nuclear issue be removed from the campaign by holding an advisory referendum after the election. But this was firmly refused by the Center Party leader.

The Center Party, with 80 of the 350 seats in Parliament, is the main opposition group, and tends to be supported by farmers and a growing urban middle-class constituency. Its issues have focused on the environment, decentralization and regional development.

Together, the Centerists and the two other opposition parties hold 175, or exactly half of the seats in Parliament, and the Social Democrats and Communists hold the other half. The Social Democrats, with 156 members in Parliament, have governed with the tacit support of the 19 Communists, and any 15 votes in Parliament have been resolved through the drawing of lots.

The other opposition parties are the Moderates, formerly the Conservatives, with 51 seats in Parliament; and the Liberal Party, with 34 seats.

Mr. Palme has pressed his campaign with two interrelated themes: he tells voters, essentially, "You never had it so good," and adds that the opposition is liable somehow to reduce the extraordinary range of health, retirement and educational benefits that the Social Democrats have introduced in their years in power.

Kissinger's Tested Style of Negotiating Faces A Very Different Range of Problems in Africa

By JOHN DARNTON
Special to The New York Times

DARES SALAAM, Tanzania, Sept. 16—So far, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's mission to bring peace to southern Africa has shown only the delicacy, complexity and immensity of the job involved.

Following his talks with President Julius K. Nyerere yesterday, two dramatically contrasting news conferences were held. In one, President Nyerere, sitting on the back porch of his state house, passionately explained his mixed feelings toward the American initiative and said, in effect, that he was less hopeful than ever.

In the other, Mr. Kissinger, braced behind a lectern at the Kilimanjaro Hotel, suggested that President Nyerere's remarks were the kind of thing that accompanies negotiations and sought to portray himself as nothing more than a conduit for relaying views between black-ruled and white-ruled countries.

But the fact remains that so far the Kissinger trip has drawn a good deal of suspicion and doubt from black Africa, some obviously for appearance sake but much of it real.

Those who traveled with Mr. Kissinger during his Middle East negotiations note that gloom is a perfect curtain-raiser for his style of diplomacy. With it, even a relatively minor advance in this case, an agreement for a constitutional conference on South-West Africa embracing all sides—takes on the appearance of a miracle and can generate momentum.

Some Call Gloom Justified
But those who have followed events in Africa feel the gloom justified and point out the vast differences between the Middle East and southern Africa in terms of issues, multiplicity of factions and personalities.

Mr. Kissinger has said privately that President Nyerere, whom he greatly respects, is not "another Sadat." The implication is that, unlike the Egyptian President, whom Mr. Kissinger has praised for courage in negotiating with the Israelis despite Arab criticism, there is no African leader willing to run the risk of appearing moderate on the question of "liberation."

The basic underlying obstacle, the Secretary said, referring to both whites and blacks, is "the reluctance of anybody to admit that negotiations are possible before they know that negotiations will succeed."

His point, as far as black Africa is concerned, is not quite valid. The African leaders could retort that long before Mr. Kissinger entered the scene, at the Victoria Falls conference last year, they tried negotiating for majority rule with the Rhodesian Prime Minister, Ian D. Smith, using Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa as an intermediary. The fact that the venture failed—because Mr. Vorster was reluctant to apply sufficient pressure on Mr. Smith, according to the Africans—has left a sense of pessimism and even betrayal.

The reputations of moderates, such as President Kenneth D. Kanda of Zambia, suffered in the growing nationalist fervor of Organization of African Community gatherings, and they have changed from doves to hawks.

In the Middle East, Mr. Kissinger worked for a peace settlement after the fighting had stopped. In southern Africa, the fighting is continuing and, indeed, growing.

There is a constituency among the blacks that says the fighting should go on. It stems from the conviction that the military advantage has swung to the blacks and that negotiations undertaken later, when territory is actually won, are bound to be more advantageous. That conviction is running especially strong now that the rainy season, which will shift the tactical advantage to the guerrillas, is about to begin in Rhodesia. To negotiate, some feel, would be seen as a sign of weakness.

There is also an element of pride and a sentiment for winning the war. Of all the African nations that have won independence, only two, Algeria and Guinea-Bissau, can honestly say they have defeated colonial forces on the battlefield. The slogan of the Zimbabwe People's Army, the main fighting force of the Rhodesian blacks, is "We are our own liberators."

Mr. Kissinger has stressed that during his visits in April, every African head of state urged him to meet with Prime Minister Vorster. But in the interim, the riots and killings have occurred in South Africa, and they have made it difficult for African Presidents to explain how they can countenance conversations with a man their own newspapers decry as a butcher of black children.

Mr. Kissinger is new to Africa, and some would say he has yet to acquire the necessary feel for the politics and special sensibilities. Days before his arrival here, he caused a flap because press reports said that he had been "invited" instead of "welcomed"—a distinction promptly corrected by the image-conscious Tanzanians.

Three Conflicts Involved
The African presidents say they fear that the United States is acting out of self-interest, to contain Soviet influence, rather than out of a sincere commitment to the concept of majority rule. If this is the case, they say, then America will drift into an alliance with South Africa, which claims to be fighting communism, if the negotiations fail.

But there is also a strong moral tone to their position. They say they want someone on their side because it is right, and not because of fear of another superpower. The level of idealism clashes somewhat with Mr. Kissinger's brand of realpolitik.

In the Middle East, the Secretary of State could identify the conflict and the parties involved. In southern Africa, there is not one conflict but three—over Rhodesia, over South-West Africa and potentially over South Africa. In the case of Rhodesia, the nationalist factions are so splintered that it would be impossible to know whom to invite to the conference table.

While the nationalist leaders are totally dependent upon the "front line" African presidents to wage their struggle, the presidents listen to their opinions. And each of the moderates—except Joshua Nkomo, the moderate who engaged in talks with Mr. Smith six months ago—is suspicious about Mr. Kissinger.

Most suspicious of all is Robert Mugabe, the Rhodesian who is emerging as the most popular politician among the guerrillas. Significantly, Mr. Mugabe has voiced reservations about a key provision of the Kissinger plan, financial guarantees for whites in Rhodesia under a black government. "Who will pay blacks for all their years of being exploited by the whites?" he said in an interview here last week.

Waldheim Supports Move By Kissinger to Mediate Southern Africa Dispute

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Sept. 16—Secretary General Kurt Waldheim today endorsed American mediation efforts in southern Africa despite the skepticism about Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's shuttle diplomacy expressed by some African governments.

Mr. Waldheim said at a news conference that an "escalation of violence could be inevitable" should the negotiation process fail.

Challenged by a Ghanaian reporter's assertion that nothing was being accomplished by peaceful means, the United Nations chief said: "I am still hopeful for negotiated settlement, I do not deny, however, that the program is getting one and more difficult."

Though problems of race relations in southern Africa seem likely to minimize the session of the General Assembly that is to open Tuesday, the ecific issue of South-West Africa—recognized here as Namibia—poses the most immediate problem for the United Nations.

A long delayed Security Council debate on this issue has been scheduled for Wednesday, and most Council delegates expect that unless progress can be shown next week there will be strong pressures for imposition of economic sanctions against South Africa.

KISSINGER IS WARNED OF URGENCY IN AFRICA

... talks with Mr. Kissinger in Zurich early two weeks ago, will convey to Mr. Kissinger the Rhodesian views as well as his own. If the Rhodesian whites appear ready to accept the principle of black majority rule in two years and to negotiate details of a transition, Mr. Kissinger will likely meet with Mr. Smith as well while in South Africa.

But reporters accompanying Mr. Kissinger aboard his Air Force jet from Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, to Lusaka this morning were told again that Mr. Kissinger viewed as remote the possibility that Mr. Smith at this stage would agree to the terms set by Mr. Kissinger for a meeting.

Tanzanian Leader Pessimistic

Mr. Kissinger informed President Julius K. Nyerere of Tanzania yesterday and Mr. Kaunda today of the conditions for a Smith meeting. Both black leaders have accepted the value of meetings between Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Vorster and Mr. Smith if they promote progress toward black rule in southern Africa. But they object to such meetings if they only enhance the international reputations of the white leaders whose regimes are detested in black Africa.

Mr. Nyerere, who sees himself as a leader of the militant wing of the non-aligned movement, said last night that he was not encouraged so far by Mr. Kissinger's mediation efforts. But Mr. Kaunda, somewhat more moderate than Mr. Nyerere, seemed almost desperate for success so that all-out conflict in this part of the world can be avoided.

Sitting across from Mr. Kissinger in his State House, which looks like a small version of the White House, Mr. Kaunda said repeatedly that unless Mr. Kissinger's mission proved successful "we will fight."

Twice he quoted Mr. Vorster as having said such a war would be "too ghastly to contemplate."

Mr. Kissinger seemed moved by Mr. Kaunda's emotional presentation in front of cameras and reporters and said the United States shared the view that "time is running out."

"You can be sure that I am conscious of the responsibility," he said. "I don't know whether we can succeed where others have attempted for more than a decade."

He concluded by saying "a prayer for all of us, for your people and our people, that I can bring you encouraging news."

Mr. Kissinger will return to Lusaka and Dar es Salaam on Monday to report to Mr. Kaunda and Mr. Nyerere on his talks with Mr. Vorster as well as any that might be held with Mr. Smith.

Concessions Are Expected

Although Mr. Nyerere took a hard line yesterday against any concessions toward a negotiated settlement, the Kissinger party continues to believe that the black Africans would prefer a negotiated solution and will make some concessions to that end. But until negotiations seem certain of success, Mr. Kissinger expects the black Africans to insist on no compromises.

An issue where this is acute involves the efforts to convene a conference on South-West Africa, also known as Namibia. The black Africans want only the national group they recognize, the South-West African People's Organization, to negotiate with South Africa.

Mr. Kissinger hopes to receive from Mr. Vorster a firm agreement on a conference on South-West Africa, a willingness to deal with the South-West African People's Organization and a statement of support for black majority rule in Rhodesia within a short time. Mr. Kissinger also expects Mr. Vorster to report whether he believes Mr. Smith is ready to yield to the pressure for black majority rule.

Some Basques End Work Stoppage Called as Protest Against Brutality

MADRID, Sept. 16 (UPI)—Thousands of Basque industrial workers returned to their jobs today after a three-day strike that was called as a protest against police brutality. But other Basques held out, demanding that the police free four jailed persons.

The Governor of Basque Province said there was nothing he could do about releasing the four Basques. He said they had already been handed over to authorities that were investigating their role in street riots that accompanied the strike. The stoppages, which idled 250,000 industrial workers Monday and half that number Tuesday and yesterday, were touched off by the killing of a leftist demonstrator last week by the police.

Kissinger Is Urged to Seek Talks With Detained South Africa Blacks

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Sept. 16—An organization that vigorously opposes apartheid said in a statement tonight that South Africa's 18 million blacks would look skeptically on Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's visit here this weekend unless he insisted on meeting some of the black leaders detained by the Government.

The statement from the organization, the Christian Institute of Southern Africa, came as American diplomatic sources confirmed that Mr. Kissinger would meet with leaders of South Africa's nonwhite community during his three-day visit, which begins tomorrow. However, previous statements by South African officials have made it clear that there is no question of allowing detainees to attend.

Mr. Kissinger's discussions with opponents of apartheid, during a break in his talks with Prime Minister John Vorster, will evidently be split into two sessions. At the first, he will meet with prominent figures in the communities of the blacks, Indians and the colored, as people of mixed-race are called here. Later, the Secretary will meet with a group that is expected to include some whites.

Warning by Institute

The Christian Institute, in its statement, said: "A foreign statesman visiting the South African Government bestows a respectability and approval upon the apartheid regime, unless he specifically rejects it." It made no reference to Mr. Kissinger's speech in Philadelphia last month in which he said that apartheid was "inconsistent with any concept of human dignity."

The institute, which has seen several of its workers detained in the Government's roundup of black opponents of the racial system, said that Mr. Kissinger could not hope to establish a lasting peace in the region if his talks were confined to the people that the governments concerned were prepared to let him see—in Rhodesia, South-West Africa and South Africa.

The only confirmed participant in Mr. Kissinger's discussions with nonwhite representatives is Hudson W. Ntsawisi, chief minister of the Gazankulu homeland, one of nine rural areas set aside by the Government for blacks. Mr. Ntsawisi was the spokesman for a group of homeland leaders who met recently in Johannesburg and demanded immediate moves to end apartheid.

Key Leaders Invited

Among those expected at the discussions is Gatscha Buthelezi, chief minister of the KwaZulu homeland, who is nominal leader of the Zulus, the country's largest tribal group, with 4.8 million people. Others understood to have received invitations include I. N. Reddy, leader of the 800,000 Indians; Sonny Leon, chairman of the colored Labor Party, which has strong support among the country's 2.3 million people of mixed descent, and several elected leaders from the black townships that have been engulfed by anti-Government violence for the last three months.

Some police officers believe that the bombing of two buses in white suburbs of Johannesburg last night and a similar incident in a downtown department store today—the first attacks in white areas of the city since the black upheaval in the region began in June—may have been the start of a co-ordinated campaign to draw attention to the plight of blacks during the Kissinger visit.

In the mixed-race township of Manenberg near Cape Town today, two blacks were shot dead after the police opened fire to disperse stone-throwing crowds. Last week 25 demonstrators were shot dead by the police during demonstrations in the area.

Bergman Begins U.S. Jail Term; Attorneys Will Fight State Sentence

By RICHARD J. MEISLER
Bernard Bergman, the nursing-home operator whose activities focused public attention on corruption and neglect in care for the aged in New York City, ended months of legal wrangling yesterday and began serving a four-month Federal sentence for Medicaid and tax fraud.

His attorneys, meanwhile, prepared to fight a one-year sentence for bribery, imposed this week by a New York State Supreme Court judge.

Investigations of Mr. Bergman's activities, beginning in 1967, in hundreds of hours of hearings, thousands of pages of reports and more than a dozen pieces of state legislation, which are regarded as crucial to the improvement of care in and financial control over nursing homes in the city and state.

Mr. Bergman accompanied by his son, Meyer, arrived at the Justice Department complex in Foley Square early yesterday morning, after Judge Marvin E. Frankel of Federal District Court on Wednesday evening denied a last motion for a reduction and delay of sentence.

He surrendered to a deputy marshal in the United States Marshal's office shortly after 9:15 A.M., stating:

"I'm here. I want to get it over with as quickly as possible."
About a half-hour later, Mr. Bergman was escorted through a bridge that connects the Justice Department office with the new Federal Metropolitan Correction Center, where he was fingerprinted, photographed and given a medical examination.

By early afternoon, he was en route, with eight other Federal convicts, to the minimum-security Federal prison in Allenwood, Pa.

Son Criticizes Judge

Mr. Bergman took pains to avoid newsmen stationed around the Foley Square area, and his efforts were successful. Meyer Bergman described his father as calm, although he said Mr. Bergman's health has been deteriorating.

Asked outside the correction center whether he or his father felt any remorse for the crimes for which Mr. Bergman was convicted, Meyer Bergman paused for a long moment and said: "I'd rather not comment on that."

The younger Mr. Bergman bitterly criticized the decision of Justice Aloysius Stella of the State Supreme Court last Tuesday to set aside a plea bargain and sentence the senior Mr. Bergman to a year in prison in addition to the four-month Federal term he is now serving.

"This is an outrage," Meyer Bergman said. "Our feeling is that we have been double-crossed by the state, that the state violated its plea bargain, and we are going to make our position clear in the next few days."

Both he and later Mr. Bergman's attorney, Nathan Lewin, implied that Mr. Bergman might, as a result of the sentence, take action to recover his assets from the state. He had signed them over to the state to sell, to recover $2.5 million defrauded from Medicaid, which he acknowledged as part of the plea bargain.

The defense moved immediately after the sentencing to withdraw Mr. Bergman's plea of guilty to the charge in question—that of bribing Albert H. Blumenthal, the Assembly majority leader. It obtained a stay until Monday to prepare its position, and was working on that position yesterday.

Mr. Lewin said he would file papers in the case "early next week."

An indictment against Mr. Blumenthal, charging bribery and perjury, was dismissed by Judge Stella earlier this year.

The 65-year-old Mr. Bergman will serve his sentence at the Allenwood correctional facility, which has previously housed several figures in the Watergate scandals: Clifford Irving the author; Ralph Ginzburg, the publisher, and other Federal offenders who are regarded as low security risks.

There is no chance for early parole, because Federal law requires that short-term sentences be served in their entirety.

A Minimum-Security Jail
The 400-acre Allenwood prison was described by its Superintendent, I. Eldon Jensen, as "a very-minimum-security prison."
"There are fences," he said, "but they are not designed to keep people in or out, they're just designed to let us know where our property ends."
He added that the prisoners—about 500 of them—live in open, dormitorylike accommodations and have access to a game room, television and a library, work either in the prison's farm factory or on its farm.

"It doesn't have the feel of a prison in a James Cagney sense," Mr. Jensen said. "It's the opposite end of the scale from Lewisburg and Terre Haute and others."

Mr. Bergman is expected to receive kosher food during his sentence, Mr. Jensen said he would have no trouble complying with that request.

Reports of the conditions and financing of Mr. Bergman's nursing homes, beginning in 1974, led to State and Federal investigations that uncovered poor treatment of patients and widespread pattern of abuse of Medicaid payments.

Assemblyman Andrew J. Stein, Democrat-Liberal of Manhattan, was chair of one of the earliest inquiries into nursing homes, said yesterday that the unveiling of Mr. Bergman's case had let "a great deal of improvement."

"The State Health Department closed 72 nursing homes in the past years," he said. "We have passed very good corrective legislation, and the Health Department is doing a much better job of auditing and inspecting homes."

A spokesman for the State Health Department said there was a "tremendous improvement overall in the quality of care being provided and in the reduction or elimination of abuses in the Medicaid program."

ANTITRUST BILL TO WHITE HOUSE

From House Would Add Consumer Protection—Revision of Antitrust Law Is Nearly Ready

DAVID E. ROSENBAUM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—The House of Representatives passed and sent to the President today a major antitrust bill designed to give consumers added protection against corporate price fixing. The House passed another measure, which would prohibit the use of the dearth of Medicaid funds to pay for abortions in most situations. The passage of the abortion provision was expected. The critical vote tomorrow or Monday in the Senate is expected.

Congressional Actions
The adjournment date drawing near, Congress continued to act with urgency. Among the other developments were the following: House and Senate cleared for President Ford's signature one of the comprehensive revisions of the tax law. Mr. Ford is expected to sign the bill.

The House gave preliminary approval to a budget for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. The budget, which was adopted yesterday, sets a spending level of $143.1 billion and a deficit of $13.1 billion.

The Senate approved a bill that would provide credits to offset part of the college tuition payments. The bill is unlikely to be approved by the House.

The House rules committee cleared a measure that would limit the Federal regulation of the price of goods. A comparable bill passed by the Senate, but this year is still in doubt.

The House, by a vote of 307 to 101, rejected Ford's veto of a bill for Federal research into and development of an electric automobile. It is expected to follow suit on legislation that development of such should be left to private industry.

Very Over Antitrust Bill
The antitrust bill was one of the most controversial of the year to consumers and one of the most objectionable to businessmen. Few measures in the history of Congress have been the subject of such vigorous attacks by both sides.

When the President on the bill, if Mr. Ford signs the bill, please some business interests. On the other hand, he vetoes the bill, he is subject to political charges of being sympathetic to consumers.

The President's Democratic opponent has announced his support for the bill and has called for measures against antitrust legislation.

The House has given no indication of its intentions, although lobbyists took note of the fact that Robert J. Dole of Kansas, running mate, voted for the Senate.

Opposition of Some Lobbyists
Business lobbyists said that they opposed the bill because, for example, Mr. Ford could not afford to pass legislation.

The bill was passed by the House by a vote of 215 to 177.

The three main provisions in the bill are: to authorize state attorneys general to bring suits seeking treble damages of consumers in their suits against price-fixers; to give the antitrust division of the Department of Justice the power to compel companies to produce information in their proceedings; and to expand the program under which corporations must notify the Justice Department of anticipated mergers.

One of those provisions is by far the most controversial and the only one that the President's opponents contend that the only consumers have against price-fixing is the ability of state officials to sue them as a group.

The opponents of giving state attorneys general the power argue that it would be an encroachment by politically ambitious officials and could force business suits out of court for exorbitant sums of money.

The question has proved to be a political issue of the year and one of the most difficult to resolve.

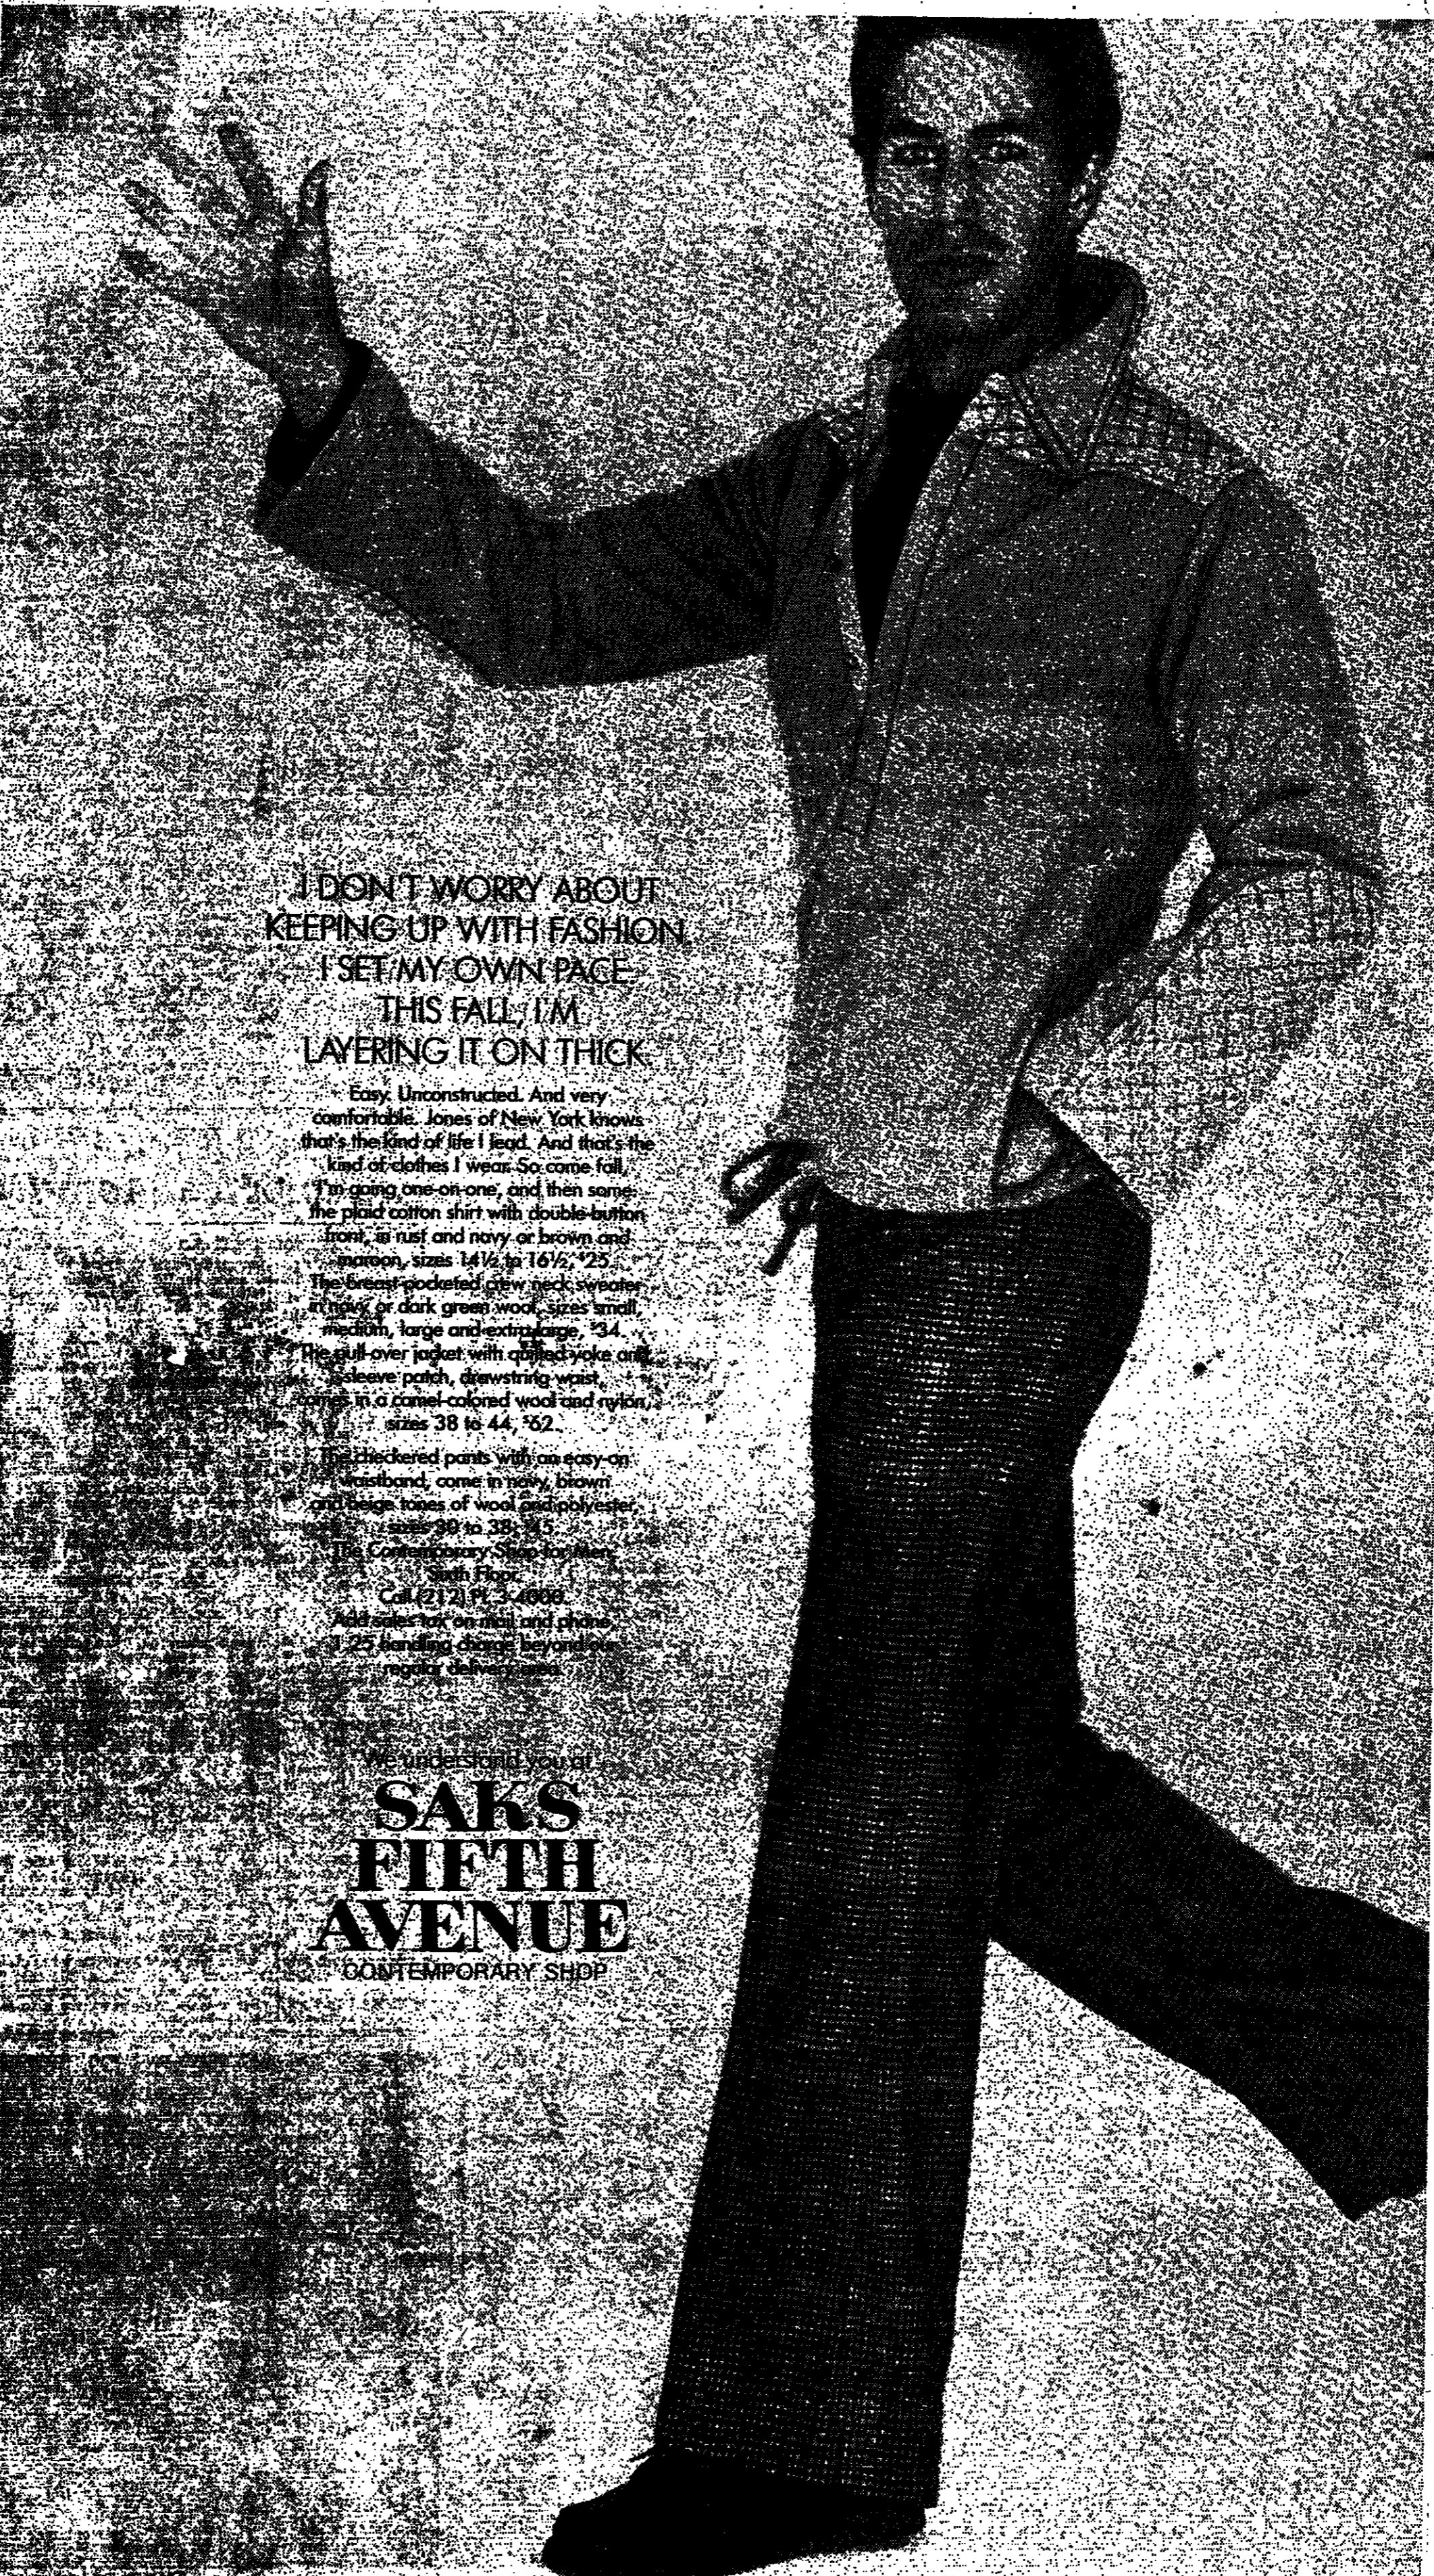

The House has insisted on legislation that would outlaw abortions paid for by the Federal program that provides medical care for the indigent. The bill has been adamantly opposed to the measure.

After a long deadlock, a House-Senate conference committee agreed yesterday on a compromise that would prohibit federal abortions except when the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term.

Effect of the Bill
The official report accompanying the bill stated that its effect would be to protect women abortions under the measure, which passed by a vote of 256 to 114. Abortions were immoral and wrong for the Government to fund.

The measure argued that the measure was necessary to that it denied poor women while women pay for them could readily be used to fund other legislation.

The bill is part of a package of appropriations for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the Department of Labor. The package is valued at $4 billion greater than that of Mr. Ford, and he is expected to sign it. There is a good chance that Congress will override the

Carter Says Debate Will Pit Ford Against His Own Record in Office

By JAMES T. WOOTEN
Special to The New York Times
INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 16—One week before his nationally televised, face-to-face debate with President Ford, Jimmy Carter today predicted sarcastically that Mr. Ford would be pitted against his own performance in the White House.

"His own record is his opponent," the Democratic Presidential candidate said here in a carefully prepared, scuffing response to the President's first campaign speech last night in Ann Arbor, Mich.

After his aides spent the pre-dawn hours framing his answer to the President, Mr. Carter walked into an airport news conference and bluntly accused Mr. Ford of making "last-minute" promises blatantly inconsistent with his past positions.

"Why he's vetoed Democratic bills that would have done precisely what he proposed in his speech," Mr. Carter said.

"I think he's grossly underestimating the memory and the intelligence of the American voters."

Cites Specific Bills

Asked to be specific, he listed bills aimed at creating employment opportunities and supplementing the interest on federally insured home mortgages as examples.

Combined with his speech in suburban Detroit last night, Mr. Carter's remarks seemed to reflect a continuing effort on his part to rebut Republican charges that he is less than specific on campaign issues.

Before about 1,000 members of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations at a hotel in Dearborn, Mich. last night, he meticulously cited nine "economic errors" made by the Administrations of Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford, all of which, he argued, had led to the country's worst economic conditions "since the Great Depression."

Citing Polls, a Carter Aide Says Candidate Will Draw The Bulk of Catholic Vote

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—Jimmy Carter's success in winning support among once-suspicious Jewish voters illustrates how the Democratic Presidential candidate will also gain strength among Roman Catholics, Charles H. Kirbo, one of his closest personal advisers, said today.

He said that the latest Carter polls showed that the candidate was getting 70 to 80 percent of the Jewish vote, although six months ago surveys had demonstrated that "we had a Jewish problem."

"We are going to get the bulk of the Catholic vote," Mr. Kirbo, an Atlanta lawyer, said at a reporters' breakfast.

"They're just going to like Jimmy better than they do Ford." Contending that Catholic voters would fall into line behind Mr. Carter "as they get to know him and understand him," Mr. Kirbo said that the candidate's poll ratings in some Catholic areas were already "way up there."

The projected Carter vote rose between 8 and 10 percent in one Catholic area after a visit by the candidate, he said.

Problem of Fuzziness

The union group, clearly sympathetic to his candidacy, responded exuberantly, and both the candidate and his staff seemed pleased with the speech, particularly in light of what they believed was its positive contrast with the President's, delivered almost simultaneously only 35 miles away at the University of Michigan.

The Carter assistants, exuding confidence this week after eight grueling days of campaigning, believe the problem of Mr. Carter's "fuzziness" has been resolved. They regarded it as a problem not because they think their candidate is vague, but rather because he is perceived to be so by some voters.

Further, members of the Carter staff are persuaded that Republican suggestions that the Democratic nominee would be a "big spender" if elected have been successfully countered by Mr. Carter's steady thumping of the conservative drum.

By stressing fiscal moderation, balanced budgets, tough bureaucratic management and a muscular national defense, he said he was attempting to re-emphasize the point on the political spectrum that he believes resulted in his nomination.

"I'm partially satisfied," he said today as his chartered campaign plane flew here from Saginaw, Mich., where he had spoken under threatening skies to fewer than 300 Spanish-speaking supporters celebrating Mexican Independence Day.

Mariachi Bands and Sambas

There were mariachi bands, colorful sambas and encouraging posters, but the size of the gathering puzzled many of those travelling with Mr. Carter and accustomed to larger audiences in a Presidential campaign.

The appointment, according to Jody Powell, his press secretary, was part of the candidate's continuing effort to run a highly personal, informal campaign.

Mr. Powell and others have been concerned that voters might be taken slightly aback by Mr. Carter's stature these days as a part of his party's hierarchy—a candidate seen in the company of its establishment figures, such as Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, Mayor Richard Daley of Chicago and today, Senator Vance Hartke of Indiana.

Mr. Carter's strategists believe, and most of his polls confirm, that his strength during the primary season evolved from the perception of him as an "outsider." So, despite his unequivocal endorsement today of Senator Hartke's re-election candidacy, much of the emphasis in his scheduling is and will continue to be in the style with which he is most familiar.

Nationally, Mr. Kirbo said, the latest Carter polls show the Democratic candidate running 12 to 15 percentage points ahead of President Ford, with the margin rising to 20 to 25 points in the South. In some of the larger states, he reported, the Carter edge is only 5 or 6 points, compared to 8 or 9 in Texas and 20 in Florida.

Asked what he would advise Mr. Carter to do in those relatively close states, Mr. Kirbo replied: "I'd tell him to get in there and campaign personally. His polls always go up behind him."

Drawing more softly and slowly than his longtime political protégé, Mr. Kirbo predicted that the first Carter-Ford debate would attract more attention than the later ones, with voters impressed "not so much by what they say as the way that they say it."

In the debates, the Carter adviser said, "I think he ought to be the same Jimmy Carter, and I think he will be."

Other Points Are Made

Under questioning by reporters, Mr. Kirbo made these other points:

"Mr. Carter runs the risk of 'losing some of the freshness he's had' by working to unify the party and thus becoming identified with politicians because 'the truth of the matter is that people don't trust anybody who's a politician.'"

"Daniel P. Moynihan, the winner of New York's Democratic Senate primary, 'will be a good campaigner and will help our ticket there.'"

"He does not expect to accept a post in the Government if Mr. Carter is elected, because it would be 'very painful and difficult' to leave his Atlanta law practice and his family and private interests there.

Ford to Campaign in Deep South In a Direct Challenge to Carter

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—President Ford announced today that he would undertake an ambitious challenge of Jimmy Carter in the Deep South with a three-day tour by airplane, automobile and Mississippi River boat.

"This is the best evidence that what I said I meant," the President declared late today in reiterating his refusal to concede any state to the Democratic nominee, even in Mr. Carter's native region.

The President Avoids a Prediction

The plans for the journey through Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida from Sept. 25 to 27 were announced by Mr. Ford after he met in the White House with Republican Party leaders from 12 Southern states.

Several of the party leaders predicted that Mr. Ford would win a substantial share, perhaps even a majority, of the region's electoral votes in the Nov. 2 election. But the President's decision to mount an aggressive Southern campaign appeared designed more to throw Mr. Carter off balance, forcing him to be more attentive to the South, than to attempt to overwhelm him on his home ground.

The President, making an unexpected appearance before reporters with the party chairman, refrained from making any personal forecast of the likely result of the three-day journey. He merely described it as proof that he was serious in pledging to conduct a national campaign.

Several of Mr. Ford's campaign strategists have said that his candidacy will succeed or fail principally in the major industrial states stretching from the Northeast to the Middle West and one Ford campaign official, Ely Peterson, restated the assessment in an interview today.

Solidity of the South Questioned

But opinion polls conducted for the President Ford Committee while he was in the South ahead throughout the South, were said to detect surprising latent support for the President in such states as Mississippi, Louisiana and North Carolina.

The Ford campaign strategists were said to believe that a concerted effort in the Deep South could force Mr. Carter to devote more attention than he had planned to his native region, thus diverting Democratic campaign resources from the battleground states of the nation's industrial midsection.

"The Solid South is not so solidly for Jimmy Carter," said Paula Unruh, the Republican Party leader in Oklahoma who is head of the organization of Southern Republican chairmen.

Mrs. Unruh said that the former Georgia Governor "may be the boy next door

Dole Is Jeered by Students And Then Upstaged by Rockefeller

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON
Special to The New York Times
Senator Robert J. Dole, had addressed Vice-Presidential nominee, got his first strong dose of heckling by students yesterday at Binghamton, N.Y., and responded, grim-faced, with a facetious jab at the Democratic Presidential candidate.

The Kansas said to the chanting students. "Thank you, Mr. Carter. We hope you're on his side. We don't want you on ours."

In the Binghamton scene as in four other New York stops between Buffalo and Madison Avenue, Mr. Dole was overshadowed by the man he hopes to succeed, Vice President Rockefeller.

Exuberant even by his own standards, the former New York Governor kept repeating that he was "just thrilled" to be introducing a substitute in his old domain. The turnout of old Rockefeller lieutenants at each stop today suggested an accelerating Republican campaign in a state that was viewed as hopelessly Democratic only weeks ago.

Polled 4 Polls Behind

President Ford and Senator Dole are only four percentage points behind the Democratic ticket of former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia and Senator Walter F. Mondale of South Dakota, according to Republican polls of New York cited by Mr. Rockefeller. That is a small gap, Mr. Rockefeller said, compared with the handicaps he overcame in more than one state campaign.

Mr. Dole's assignment as the main Republican campaigner did not apply in New York yesterday. In place of his usual free-wheeling, barbed humor about the Democrats, Mr. Dole repeatedly read a White House text in praise of Mr. Ford. Mr. Rockefeller dominated him to the point of coaching the Senator's answers and insisting, over Mr. Dole's muffled objections, that the Republican platform adopted in Kansas City last month "does not reflect the thinking of Mr. Ford."

But especially at the Binghamton airport, where a rally platform had been improvised in a hangar, Mr. Rockefeller was drawn to center stage and seized it. About 25 students from the State University of New York seemed more interested in Mr. Rockefeller anyway, repeating a chant that linked the shooting of prisoners at Attica State Prison five years ago with assassination in Chile: "Attila! Attila! Anyway you figger, Rocky pulled the trigger."

Gestured Three Times

After the protesters showed they were able to drown out his speech, Mr. Rockefeller gestured three times with his finger. He was only responding in kind, he said later. But unlike Mr. Dole, who curtailed his speech in the face of the chanting, Mr. Rockefeller lengthened his with teasing. "They wouldn't be here if I hadn't been Governor, because I built the university."

disavowals" by the bishops might be, among other things, an indication of the internal church problems the bishops are facing.

Archbishop Bernardini said, "We have gotten a considerable amount of mail, some of it supportive and some of it not supportive." Much of the mail, he added, "expressed concern that we have endorsed one candidate over another. We have not done this."

Mr. Ford had said he was opposed to abortion on demand except in certain specified conditions, and would like to minimize the use of Federal funds for abortion. He also said he would uphold existing laws governing abortion but favored a constitutional amendment that would give the states the right to decide whether to permit abortion. That right was taken from the states by a Supreme Court ruling in 1973.

Mr. Carter's views on abortion are similar to Mr. Ford's, with one major exception: He does not support a constitutional amendment of any kind to overturn the Supreme Court ruling.

The Roman Catholic church is seeking a constitutional amendment that would, according to a position paper handed out at the news conference today, "correct the tragic errors of the Supreme Court on abortion." The church's position has been generally understood to mean a virtual ban on legal abortions.

The recent statements by the bishops were widely regarded as a sign of Mr. Ford's position on a rejection of Mr. Carter's critics, including some within the clerical ranks, also said they statements as an effort to rally Catholic vote in the Presidential election.

Women's groups have bishops for their staunch supporters. Many of them are Catholic, and many of them are non-Catholic religious groups seeking to interfere with the national guarantee of religious freedom.

In addition, a national of Roman Catholic priests is concerned that the hierarchy of other important social Rev. Timothy S. Healy, Georgetown University, in his speech this week that he is in danger of being identified with political party.

Replying to questions, Archbishop Bernardini said that he did not think the church should get into the political arena, and added: "We are not taking sides. There is no such thing as a Catholic vote."

But unlike the previous statements today by Archbishop Bernardini, he did not have the usual remarks about the positions of the two candidates. "We reject toutousion of being partisan," he said.

Struggling Farmers Show Little Enthusiasm for Candidate

By ROY REED
Special to The New York Times
YAMPA, Colo., Sept. 12—The hard-pressed cattleman of the West have revived an old joke that has a special bite in this election year.

The story is that a cattle thief and a grain thief met in Amarillo and went into business together, feeding stolen grain to stolen cattle. They sold the cattle at the end of the season and prices were so low that they lost $40 a head.

The joke is not as funny as it might be in the mountain rangeland of western Colorado. It is too close to the truth. Cattle growers are nearing the end of their third straight year of depressed prices and rising costs. Many are heavily in debt. Some have lost thousands of dollars and others have merely broken even.

In spite of that, many of the traditionally Republican cattlemen are sticking reluctantly with President Ford in this year's election.

Farmers Called Mismatched

He seems to be losing support, though, among other farmers in this region. Mrs. Unruh said that the former Georgia Governor "may be the boy next door or, who raises sugar beets, corn, barley and wheat near Wiggins, east of Denver, said this week.

Charles de Gansahl, who runs a 12,000-acre ranch on the purple sage slopes near here, seems to be part of a tiny minority this year. Of the cattlemen and farmers interviewed in three days of travel across Colorado this week, he was the only one who expressed enthusiasm for either Presidential candidate.

"I can't see that he's been bad for cattlemen," he said of Mr. Ford. He mentioned the President's recent move to block the illegal importing of beef through the free-trade zone in Puerto Rico.

The opinion of his wife, Est, was more typical. "I think he's the lesser of two evils," she said of Mr. Ford. Three of their sons are lukewarm Ford supporters, and the fourth is toying with switching to Mr. Carter.

Mr. Carter's support seems as soft as Mr. Ford's.

Conversations with people on both sides of the election indicate that Mr. Carter has the most to gain in rural Colorado. There is deep frustration among farmers, and many believe that Government policies have made things worse.

Cattlemen, for example, resent the Government's policy of permitting large amounts of imported beef to enter the country. They especially resent the illegal beef that has come through Puerto Rico in recent years.

Nixon Blamed for Price Depression

They also believe that the ceiling on beef prices imposed by former President Nixon in 1973 started the cattle-price depression that still exists.

"I think the Government has sold out the little family operation like I've got here," said Leonard Snowden, another Yampa rancher. Every other large industry, from the railroads to the auto manufacturers, gets Government aid and protection, but not the farmer, he said.

That was an echo of a coffee-shop conversation overheard recently in Arkansas. A group of cattlemen were bemoaning the price of cattle.

"If General Motors got in this kind of trouble, the Government would be right there to bail them out," one said. "But nobody up there pays any attention."

Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Buttz was criticized by many of those interviewed in Colorado.

"I think he's one of the poorest Secretaries of Agriculture we've ever had," Kenneth Becker said. "I'd hang him from the first oak tree."

Others saw Dr. Buttz as trying to help farmers, but with little effect.

What farmers are still chafing because of last year's embargo on wheat sales to the Soviet Union. Farmers' wheat prices have been cut in half since then, they said, but bread is still selling for the same high price.

Wheat Grower Switching to Carter

Orville Meredith of Byers, who was planting 600 acres of wheat this week, said he would switch to the Democratic candidate this year after years of voting Republican. President Ford permitted George Meany, president of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, to force him into the wheat embargo, Mr. Meredith said. He said he believed that Mr. Carter,

Petition Asking Recall Election Of Mayor Rizzo Upheld by Judge

a stay from the Pennsylvania Supreme Court pending the appeal they promised to seek there today—an emergency hearing before the Supreme Court could come as early as Monday—the result, under the city charter, is that the 55-year-old Mr. Rizzo, a nominal Democrat who supported the election bids of former President Nixon and of Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, will have to face a recall referendum on Election Day, Nov. 2, that his supporters say will be a very close thing.

The Philadelphia Inquirer reported tonight that the Mayor, through one of his aides at City Hall, had implicitly conceded the difficulty of the recall race by warning that unless he has the support of former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, the Democratic Presidential candidate, the Mayor will turn his formidable Philadelphia machine against Mr. Carter in November.

The normally heavy Democratic turnout in this city often determines whether Pennsylvania goes Democratic or Republican in statewide elections.

The newspaper also said that the Rizzo organization relayed the same threat today to Representative William J. Green, a Philadelphia Democrat who is campaigning against Representative H. John Heinz 3d of Pittsburgh, a Republican, for the Senate seat of Hugh Scott.

In Philadelphia, Mayor Frank L. Rizzo reacts to the news.

Newspaper a Rizzo Target

The Inquirer has been a major target of Mayor Rizzo, whose attacks on the newspaper were one of the early reasons that Philadelphia liberals decided to organize in an effort to oust him.

The Mayor will have no opponent on the November ballot—or, as Judge Savitt put it in his opinion today, "no opponent but his record in office." A majority of those who vote on the recall question could oust him, turning his office over to the City Council President, George X. Schwartz, a sometimes-Rizzo man. A special mayoral election would follow.

After Judge Savitt released his detailed, 61-page opinion and order this morning, Gregory M. Harvey, a lawyer for the recall petitioners, said, "We take comfort from the fact that Rizzo has conducted himself as if he does not have the votes to win."

The lawyer said the conduct he was referring to was the long delay by the Board of Elections in deciding to invalidate the petitions, and the invalidation itself.

Shelly D. Yanoff, who heads the anti-Rizzo citizens committee, told newsmen later, "We are very pleased, and we are now campaigning for a 'Yes' vote in November." The recall question on the ballot will read, "Shall Frank L. Rizzo be recalled and removed from the office of Mayor of Philadelphia?"

Virtually All Complaints Upheld

Judge Savitt upheld virtually all of the petitioners' complaints, that the Board of Elections and its staff had illegally reduced the anti-Rizzo group's 210,000 signature—filed in June, to 88,884 by late August.

He said the board had done this by rejecting names for the lack of a middle initial for the use of the abbreviation "W." for the name William and for failing to list the ward of residence. Judge Savitt said that this was a particularly "inconceivable" action by the petitioners because the board of elections itself had "failed its statutory duty of providing voters with notice of their proper wards."

He said that other strategies used by the Board of Elections, including the unsupported finding that more than 6,000 signatures were "forgeries," were "blatantly misleading." Evidence introduced during the summer-long court battle over the recall petitions showed that 899 signatures "appeared to be signed by the same person."

Judge Savitt's opinion also found "no merit" in Mr. Rizzo's lawyer's contentions that the recall procedure was an unconstitutional infringement on the rights of the majority that elected the Mayor to a second term in 1975.

FIVE JOURNALISTS BEGIN YEAR LAW STUDY AT YALE

Five journalists have begun a new one-year fellowship program at Yale Law School that is designed to improve reporting on legal matters.

The journalists will take courses almost identical to those taken by first-year law students and upon successful completion of the program will be awarded a Master of Studies in Law degree.

The program is financed through a Ford Foundation grant, with each fellowship providing payment for tuition and a sum equivalent to the reporter's salary for the September-to-May academic year.

Early this fall, the Ford Foundation and Yale will review the program with a view of extending it for several more years.

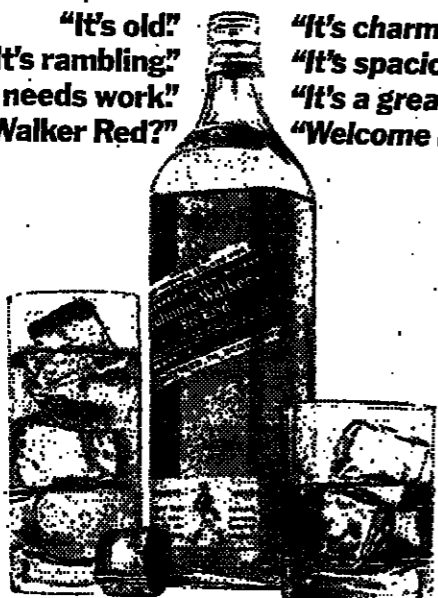

The first five journalists selected for the program were:

- Diane Camper, a reporter in the Washington bureau of Newsweek Magazine.
- Carol Green, a reporter at The Denver Post.
- Katherine Hatton, a reporter at The Cleveland Plain Dealer.
- Michael McGough, an editorial writer at The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.
- Laura Rowe, a reporter at The Washington Post.

s, but Who-Who?-Fires the Administrators?

avid W. Ehrenfeld

LANSWICK, N. J.—I am one professor who teach coolk College, a part of Rutgers. The introductory course is one, with an enrollment of 15—a foundation course for an undergraduate program. It is always embarrassing when our students, whose just raised, ask me why aren't as good as those accustomed to in high...

ized, because our university maintains a division, up to its neck in administrative red tape, charged his account a $15 "labor" fee to install a quart of antifreeze. I have found out that there is another set of administrators, part of whose remarkable job it seems to be to guess (for Federal administrators) the race and color of each job applicant to the university, on the basis of such revealing information as their names. And there is always that wonderful administrator, a vice president, I believe, who sends to every person who has had an accident in a university car a pamphlet explaining how not to have any more accidents.

This administrative glut is not confined to universities. A recent newspaper article noted that as the Metropolitan Transportation Authority ridership declines the number of administrators in high-paying positions is holding steady or increasing. In a similar spirit, the State Department has appointed a coordinator of consumer affairs, at $37,800 per year. I also suspect, but cannot prove, that similar things are happening in business and industry, and that inflationary price increases are only one of the consequences.

Vietnam's 'Gulag Archipelago'

edore Jacqueney

HN, N. J. — Nearly 18 Gen. Nguyen Van Thieu's collapsed, many former leaders, whom President persecuted for advocating liberties and a compromise to gain political prisoners. The Republic of Vietnam numbers of people in (re-education) camps: "more than according to a recently published by Nguyen Van Thieu, of Saigon-Ho Chi Minh administration. detainees are former Saigon and civilian officials. Many friends were victims of the regime's prison and atrocities, and I have no or those responsible. But Saigon officials had nothing with police repression. And detainees who were political and labor leaders not responsible—they were prey. Prisoners may be released in the next few years, the Saigon news recently. Most have a in the camps since June they were told to bring their for only a few weeks. Western journalists have el re-education camps near Tay Ninh. Reports of desiccation in other detention camps, deaths from malaria, beriberi, dysentery, and human mine-field later out from recent correspondence, escapes and tortors. Other fragmentary ions beg relatives in Vietnam to send salt and hint of deliberate starvation of prisoners. Detention camp victims reportedly include the following: Tran Van Tuyen—a democrat and socialist, and chairman of the old National Assembly opposition bloc. He eloquently criticized Saigon Government repression and corruption, favored negotiating Communist participation in a new government to end the war, and was regularly harassed by Thieu. Now the Long Khanh prison authorities call Tuyen, 63, "obstinate." His outspoken, courageous resistance has made him the Solzhenitsyn of Vietnam's "Gulag Archipelago." Ordered to write lengthy self-criticisms, the fearless old lawyer reportedly turned in two sentences: "I have committed no crimes against the Vietnamese fatherland or the Vietnamese people. If I have done anything wrong, it is only in the eyes of the Lao Dong Party" (the Communist Party of Vietnam). Bul Tying Huan—a former Hue University president and a prominent antiwar senator. Huan was a leader of Vietnam's majority An Quang Buddhists. He reportedly was sent to the camps only last autumn, months after the first wave of re-education detentions, but coinciding with communications released by the An Quang's Paris office describing 12 self-immolations by Buddhist monks and monks protesting Communist persecution in November 1975. Luong Truong Tuong—the leader of Vietnam's two-million-member Hoa Hao Buddhists. Tuong's daughter recently published a letter in French newspapers pleading for the release of her husband, brother, uncle and 72-year-old father from Chi Hoa prison. The entire Hoa Hao leadership and tens of thousands of followers have been arrested since June 1975, she wrote. Tran Ngoc Chau—a charismatic democrat with strong convictions about free elections and social justice. Chau was third-ranking member of the old Assembly, repeatedly criticized Thieu's dictatorship, advocated a peaceful settlement permitting Communists to run for office, and was dragged out of the Assembly building and jailed by Thieu's police in 1969. Father Tran Huu Thanh—a popular conservative Catholic priest whose dramatic protests against Thieu regime (believer and tyranny) included mass demonstrations and ringing manifestoes. Other arrests occurred in April 1976, including a roundup of journalists and novelists. Postwar Vietnam debate has centered too long on recalling bloodbath prophecies. No substantive reports of mass executions have emerged—certainly nothing comparable to the chilling tales of the Cambodian holocaust. Not all former third-force leaders are suffering. A few are members of unified Vietnam's new National Assembly. However, the reports of the missing, detained and dead, and the stories of re-education camp privations, although unconfirmed, are deeply disturbing. Even modest international expressions of humanitarian interest in Vietnamese political prisoners may sway Hanoi, now actively lobbying for diplomatic recognition and new trade and aid from non-Communist countries and the United Nations. People in the democracies committed to human rights can help the Vietnamese mentioned here by publicizing their connot having to guess what a means. Trust is leveling people before the election you're going to do after. Trust is not being all people. Trust is not adding words so that each audience can hear what it ear, but saying plainly and you mean, and meaning ay. Gerald Ford, Sept. 15, 1976 as emphatically and as I can, I have no intention candidate for any office, vice President or anything. Gerald Ford, Oct. 13, 1976 ink the public would stand identical pardon of Richard rald Ford, November 1973. President Ford has "formed his campaign to win the office he inherited, it unkind to point to the in-suggested above. Yet, the candidates seem determined ate on the issue of "trust." in, of course, the issue of not Jimmy Carter, the nominee, is to be trusted. Carter was accused at one ther by most of his Democrats in the primaries of positions to suit his audialural enough for the Re-seize on this ready-made as most of those same opponents found out, can of himself, and it's up to end himself against the Ford-Dole charges that he is not to be trusted. But what about Mr. Ford's own "fuzziness"? Well, when Mr. Ford took office, he went to Capitol Hill and told a Congress eager to believe him, "I don't want a honeymoon, I want a good marriage." Since then, however, he has thrown 55 vetoes back at Congress. Some of them were well deserved, some of them were of minor importance—but in his campaign this year, Mr. Ford boasted of all of them as if they had saved the Republic from the barbarians of Congress—which is not the stuff good marriages are made of. Not long after taking office, Mr. Ford said inflation was Public Enemy No. 1, asked everybody to wear a WIN ("Whip Inflation Now") pin, and called for an increase in corporation taxes. A few months later, in his first State of the Union Message, he was forced to concede that "millions of Americans are out of work" and called for tax cuts instead. In fact, Mr. Ford was only recognizing changed economic circumstances, which he and his advisers had been slow to detect. But from a leader who made such a large miscalculation in October, forcing him to such a major change of position in January, a little humility seems in order about the right of others to change their views as circumstances may dictate. As for changing positions to suit an audience: During the Florida primary this year, Mr. Ford for the first time came under severe attack from Ronald Reagan for his foreign and defense policies. He immediately announced that detente was not to be called detente anymore, although no substantive change of policy had appeared to justify this nomenclatural sleight of hand. During the Texas primary, Mr. Reagan put his emphasis on what he said were the Ford Administration's plans to abandon the Panama Canal. Mr. Ford replied in April, in a speech in Texas: "The United States will never give up its defense rights to the Panama Canal and will never give up its operational rights as far as Panama is concerned." But on April 13, Representative M. G. Snyder of Kentucky inserted in the Congressional Record the testimony of Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker, the Panama negotiator, that his instructions from Mr. Ford were to "give up the canal over a period of time." One Ford inconsistency cost him a Cabinet officer. First, he promised Secretary of Labor John Dunlop that he would sign a bill expanding picketing rights for construction unions. Then Mr. Ford discovered that Mr. Reagan was making a campaign issue of the bill, reneged on Mr. Dunlop and vetoed the measure last January. Mr. Dunlop thought it over and resigned. Just last week, Mr. Ford did support the Republican platform's call for a constitutional amendment to ban abortion. What he really supports, he then conceded at the same news conference and later, is an amendment to give each state the right to bar abortion. Fuzzy? When they want your vote, fans, they all are.

The Troubled Democrats

By James Reston

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—The Democrats are getting a little edgy about the Presidential election. The pros at the top of the party still feel that Governor Carter will hold most of the states in the Old Confederacy, and that they will carry enough of the Northern industrial states to win an electoral majority, but their voter-registration drive so far has been a disappointment. The primary elections seldom get out the vote except in the predominantly one-party states, but this week they were a spectacular dozer. In the District of Columbia, only 13 percent of the registered voters went to the polls—a miserable showing even for the last American "colony."

Nobody expected much of a turnout in Massachusetts, Minnesota, and other states where Senators Kennedy, Humphrey, and other prominent characters were shoe-ins, but even in New York, where Pat Moynihan and Bella Abzug were staging a well-publicized alley brawl for the Democratic Senatorial nomination, only 24 percent of the registered Democrats took the trouble to vote. Maybe it's still too early and not too significant, but here at the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee and Big Labor, which have stopped fussing with each other for a change and have been concentrating on registration and drumming up the faithful, the response has been less than enthusiastic.

This has been a surprise to the Democratic Party pols. They thought that after Vietnam and Watergate, a united Democratic Party, at a time of high prices and unemployment, would clobber the Republicans. They wanted to flush Jerry Ford out, on the theory that you had to know him well to reject him, but it hasn't quite worked out that way. It was also assumed here that the dominant power of the Democratic Party, with its control over the big state houses in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Illinois, Minnesota and California would prevail; but that isn't quite so clear now either. This is still the Democratic strategy, but it rests on the assumption that they can organize the party and get the faithful to register and vote. The evidence so far is that they have not been able to overcome the indifference of their own party members. George Gallup's latest poll indicates that "national voting participation may be even poorer this year than in 1972 (which was the lowest since 1948), with the distinct possibility that nonvoters will outnumber voters in the November election." Gallup finds in his polls that, for all the exertions of the labor unions, "Democrats are lagging behind the G.O.P. in the registration battle. . . . 81 percent of Republicans registered to vote compared to 75 percent of Democrats." This worries the Democratic Party leaders here and they have other worries. Governor Carter is not increasing his popularity in the nation, as he did in many states during the primaries. Something is holding him back—the Democratic Party leaders are not quite sure what it is—but something about his personality, his manner of speaking, his thin trailing voice, and his switches on major policy issues, are hurting his campaign. The President has similar problems. Most of the time he is ducking the major issues. "The question in this campaign of 1976," he said at Ann Arbor the other day, "is not who has the better vision of America, but who will act to make that vision a reality." If this is to be the basis of Mr.

WASHINGTON

Ford's argument in the coming debates, as we are told, he is in trouble, for in over a quarter of a century of public life, he has given us no "vision of America" and has acted in the Congress as a man of the opposition, and in the White House, not as an innovator of the coming years but as the champion vetoer of Democratic proposals. This is the issue that is coming up in the debates. Mr. Ford's notion is that more progress can be made by stopping bad ideas than by suggesting new ideas of his own, and he could be right; but like the Democrats, he is wondering about what the voters think, and hoping that the debates will help settle the issue. In short, both candidates and parties are "edgy" now, and wondering how the debates will come out, especially the Republicans, for they are clearly the minority party and have to hope that Ford's "Presidency" and debating skills will overcome Carter's Democratic Party organization. How to get their people registered and to the polls—this is the problem of the Democrats, and they are worried about it. For despite all their exertions, despite Carter's rushing around the country to inspire and unify his party, the Democrats are not registering and voting as expected, and this is Carter's disappointment and Ford's hope.

The Old Thrill of Travel Is Reawakened Passengers Crossing America by Rail

By RICHARD EDER "As soon as my last daughter grew up I said 'Hallelujah, I'm free at last and jumped on the railroad.'—Cora Hawthorne, lounge attendant on the San Francisco Zephyr. San Francisco, Friday, 10:25 A.M. Two dozen passengers waited on the high-backed wooden benches in the Transbay Terminal for the bus to Oakland, where the Zephyr begins its 2,400-mile Chicago run. They seemed tentative, with an uncertainty that used to be found in front of airline counters but no longer is. There was a tendency to ask porters the same questions twice. The answers were deliberate and solicitous. Today, 107 years after the eastbound Chinese tracklayers of the Central Pacific met the westbound Irish tracklayers of the Union Pacific, transcontinental rail travel in this nation that was partly built by it has become exotic, an adventure, a foolishness, a mystery. Yet things may be slowly reversing. At one level, Jimmy Carter will whistle-stop for a day next week, and railroad officials have been told that President Ford may do the same later. It is not just politics that is going to ride the rails. Amtrak, the public corporation that took over most passenger traffic in 1971, is trying to improve bulky tracks to allow high-speed service and plans the imminent replacement of old passenger cars—their average age is 25—with 255 new cars, costing half a million dollars apiece. Already transcontinental passenger traffic is growing at a rate of 10 percent a year. The improvements, plus an already popular U.S. Railpass allowing unlimited travel for a limited period, should hasten things, especially in the event—and Amtrak officials quietly count on it—of a renewed energy crisis. But who rides the rails and what does a new traveler find? Here are some notes of a recent transcontinental trip. Two 3,000-horsepower SDP-40 diesel-electric locomotives. Continued on Page B4.

At Yale's 'Happy Hours,' a Dispiriting Word

Special to The New York Times NEW HAVEN—The Yale education, heralded in song as a spree from here to eternity, may soon become a dry run if the university's Secretary, Henry Chauncey, has his way. In a memorandum to the school's 24 deans and college masters, Mr. Chauncey said, "I do not believe that any master or dean should permit the sale of liquor in any form, and I believe any master or dean could be liable if a violation is detected." The memorandum is not unusual; it has become an annual tradition on the New Haven campus as the Harvard football game, spring Frisbee and the quaffing of ale at the tables down at Mory's. Nobody has ever paid much attention to it before, particularly the Joint Council of Social Chairman, who collects $25 a student to run social functions during the academic year. At these "mixers" and "happy hours" and outings, it is customary for students not to buy their liquor, but rather to buy paper cups, or tokens or chips at $1 each. But inside the cups is usually booze, and the tokens and chips are redeemable for the same. This way they have been buying but not buying. Evading, others—like Mr. Chauncey—would call it. There are no exceptions, and gimmicks such as selling cups or tokens or chips are not permitted by the state or the university," he wrote. Yesterday The Yale Daily News published a story about the Chauncey edit, and suddenly for the first time the matter had become the subject of sober debate. One student, Cully Ivering, said it was "terrible for social interaction." Elliot Brause, a liquor-store owner, said he thought it would drive students to bars. One immediate beneficiary of the proposed policy could be Mory's. The 64-year-old drinking establishment, sells liquor on campus—legally.

News Summary

International Right to the last man if necessary... ship had not developed its own position on abortion and urged voters to draw their own conclusions. [A1:3.] Final Congressional action was taken on the tax bill and it went to the White House, where President Ford is expected to sign it. [A1:4-5.] An explanation of the provisions of the bill will be found on Page D12. In other actions, the House passed and sent to the President a major antitrust bill that gives consumers added protection against price fixing. [A13:1.] A recall petition against Mayor Frank L. Rizzo of Philadelphia was upheld by a city judge who said that invalidation of the petition by a three-man election committee composed of the Mayor's friends was "incorrect" and "arbitrary." Unless the Mayor can win a stay from the Pennsylvania Supreme Court pending a hearing, he will face a recall referendum on Nov. 2. [A1:4.] Metropolitan Turning away customers, the Housing Finance Agency issued a bond issue in the private financial market for the first time in more than a year. The huge state borrowing agency had hovered on the brink of default during the past year as New York State's fiscal problems had made buyers wary of H.F.A. bonds. [A1:5.] National Parking ticket "quotas" set by the Parking Violations Bureau have resulted in the ticketing of legally parked cars and the writing of tickets for non-existent cars. Three parking violation agents and a Brooklyn Assemblyman said that the bureau enforced the daily quotas under the guise of a productivity drive and punished those who did not meet their goals. [A1:6.] Lottery ticket shortages were predicted by the director of the New York State lottery because of the number sold during the first week of operation. John D. Quinn, the director, said 18.9 million tickets were sold in the first seven days, more than twice the number any other state has sold in the same period of time. [A1:5-6.] New academic procedures intended to lessen the chances of another cheating scandal have been instituted at West Point. A more informal and personalized approach to grading, testing and instruction that will allow "unrestricted discussion" of all assignments outside the classroom has been set up to avoid the type of collaboration that led to the current scandal. [D18:1-2.] Bernard Bergman began serving a four-month Federal jail sentence for Medicaid and tax fraud, ending months of legal wrangling. However, his attorneys were preparing to fight a one-year sentence imposed on the nursing home operator by a New York State Supreme Court justice. [A12:3-6.] Business/Finance RCA's chairman resigned after acknowledging that he had not filed until recently his personal income taxes over a five-year period ending in 1975. The company's board, which accepted the resignation of Anthony L. Courad, also withdrew its proposed offering of 5 million shares of common stock, apparently because of the management shift. Edgar H. Griffiths was named to succeed Mr. Courad as president and chief executive officer. [A1:4-5.] Oil-sharing arrangements for use in the event of another oil embargo will be tested this fall by 19 industrial nations. More than 30 oil companies will be asked to divert oil to countries supposedly short of fuel, but no ships will actually change routes. [D:14.] Interest rates have dropped all summer and the demand for credit has been stagnant despite predictions by Moody's last June of the exact opposite. The income that investors can earn from fixed-income securities has declined steadily over the last three months. [D1:5-6.] Stock prices rose in reaction to a Dow Jones industrial average closed up 8.64 points at 987.95. [D1:5.] Bond prices rose to their highest levels of the year. [D2:1.] Commodity prices were mixed, with soybeans and oats rising and wheat and soy oil prices falling. [D4:3.]

TROY AGREED IN MAY TO HELP U.S. INQUIRY

Government Promised Not to Use New Data Against Him—He May Reverse Plea

By MAX H. SEIGEL
City Councilman Matthew J. Troy Jr. has disclosed in papers filed in Supreme Court in Queens that he signed a memorandum of agreement with the United States Attorney's Office in Brooklyn last May 6 to give "fully complete and truthful cooperation and testimony" in connection with other Federal investigations.

According to the agreement, the chairman of the City Council's powerful finance committee drew the line at wearing a recorder on his body. And Ronald E. DePetris, an assistant United States Attorney in charge of the fraud division, said the Government went along with this.

Federal officials would not disclose yesterday the kind of investigations for which they would have liked Mr. Troy to wear recording equipment. Nor would they give any clues on who was under investigation.

The memorandum of agreement came to light when it was filed, along with other papers, in a move by Marvin Kornberg, Mr. Troy's lawyer, to get a restraining order barring Queens District Attorney Nicholas Ferraro from subpoenaing certain documents belonging to the City Councilman and presenting them to a grand jury.

Supreme Court Justice John J. Leary granted a temporary restraining order and scheduled a hearing for next Wednesday to determine whether the order should be made permanent.

In return for this cooperation, the Federal Government agreed not to use any information gained through Mr. Troy against him. It also promised to bring "the extent and nature of his cooperation" to the attention of the court before sentencing.

Meanwhile, there was increasing evidence that Mr. Troy, a former major political power in the Queens Democratic Party, would do another turnabout and allow his original plea of guilty to Federal charges to stand.

Last July 2, Mr. Troy pleaded guilty before the late Federal District Judge Orrin G. Judd to filing a 1972 income tax return that did not report $37,000 he had taken from the estates of law clients. Then, on Sept. 8, the City Councilman, appearing in Federal Court in Brooklyn for sentencing, surprised Judge George C. Pratt, Mr. DePetris and possibly himself, when he suddenly said he wanted to withdraw his guilty plea.

Sources close to the case who asked not to be quoted said yesterday that Mr. Kornberg's strategy would be to have his client face Federal charges rather than the fraud charges the Queens District Attorney was hoping to level. They noted that while the Federal crime was a felony under Federal law, it was not one under State law and so conviction would not bring automatic dismissal from the City Council for Mr. Troy, or his disbarment as a lawyer.

Racially Mixed Family Harassed By White Youths in Pelham Bay

By JOSEPH B. TREASTER
Ten days ago Nicholas Troiano, who is white, and his wife, Louise, who is black, took possession of a $60,000 two-story frame house in the predominantly white Pelham Bay section of the Bronx.
And they haven't had a moment's peace since.
White youths have yelled racial slurs at the newcomers, shot out windows in the house and in a family car with pellet guns, poured sugar in the gas tank of another family car, set rubbish afire on the front sidewalk, scrawled "Die Nigger" on the driveway and hung a black doll from a flagpole in the front yard.

Three Arrested
After the youths broke several windows, battered a rear door and left the doll behind early Tuesday morning, the Troianos went to the police, who, within hours, arrested three white teenagers—two 16-year-olds and a 15-year-old—and charged them with criminal mischief.

At the same time, Capt. Dominick A. Moro, the commander of the 45th Precinct, posted an around-the-clock guard at the house. He said his men were looking for other youths who have been harassing Mr. and Mrs. Troiano and their six children.

"This is an unhappy kind of situation," Captain Moro said, "but I think the fact that we made the arrests kind of put everyone on notice that we're certainly not going to tolerate this kind of activity."

He said that leads to the arrested youths were developed through witnesses to the early morning incident and added that he was particularly pleased that "we did get the cooperation of the community."
The Troianos have not yet formally moved into the dark-red house with white trim, and they are not certain when they will. But Mr. and Mrs. Troiano say they are determined that they will not be driven off.

"I will fight for the right to live there," Mrs. Troiano said in a telephone interview from her old home in the Throgs Neck section of the Bronx. "There are no laws that say because I'm black I can't live in a certain neighborhood. I will live there."

Not "Blockbusters"
Responding to a question, Mr. Troiano said his children did not seem frightened. "They're just frustrated with it," he said. "They don't like it."
Mr. Troiano, who is a self-employed businessman, said he had asked the real estate agent who sold him the house if he and his wife were likely to have trouble in the neighborhood because of their racially mixed marriage.

Mr. Troiano quoted the real estate agent as saying, "If you don't bother them, they won't bother you."
"I didn't think they would react like this," Mr. Troiano said of his new neighbors. "If I had foreseen this, I'd never have bought the house. I'm not a blockbuster or a troublemaker."

Leone Is Chosen to Run For State Supreme Court By Brooklyn Democrats

Brooklyn Democratic leaders have selected Borough President Sebastian Leone to run for the State Supreme Court in the November general election.
In confirming this yesterday, Brooklyn party sources said Mr. Leone's name had been placed before a judicial screening committee and that if it approved him, he would be nominated for the court post.
If elected to the court—in Brooklyn a Democratic nomination is usually tantamount to election—he will resign as Borough President at the end of the year, these sources said.
Party leaders reportedly have decided to name City Councilman Howard Golden, 50-year-old district leader in the Borough Park section, to succeed Mr. Leone.

Mr. Golden, a veteran of Brooklyn Democratic politics and chairman of the council's committee on state legislation, said yesterday he had heard rumors of the change but no one had contacted him.
The Democrats in Brooklyn and Staten Island, which make up the Second Judicial District, are to meet next week to nominate their candidates for the Supreme Court.

If Mr. Leone, whose term runs to the end of 1977, does resign, his successor will be elected by the 13 Brooklyn members of the City Council, all but two of whom are Democrats.

Mr. Leone was elected in the same fashion in 1970 following the resignation of Abe Stark for health reasons. He was elected for a four-year term in November 1973.

Jury Selection Starts On Brontman Kidnapping

Jury selection began in White Plains in the case against Mel Patrick Lynch and Dominick P. Byrne, who are charged with the kidnapping in August 1975 of Samuel Brontman 2d, the Seagram's heir. The defendants also are charged with grand larceny in demanding a $2.3 million ransom, which was paid by the Brontman family and then recovered. Justice George Beisheim Jr. began hearing applications in State Supreme Court of jurors wishing to be excused. He has summoned 1,000 prospective jurors in a process to be continued next Tuesday and Wednesday.

Gimbels Strike Settled

A strike of maintenance employees of Gimbels at five stores and a warehouse in the New York area was settled yesterday. John Sweeney, president of Local 32B of the Building Service Employees, announced. He said that the 200 employees involved would receive pay increases over three years ranging from $34 to $54 a week. Their pay scales, depending on job classification, had run from $125 to $250 a week, he said.

Soviet Ship Damaged

A Soviet cargo ship was damaged on Thursday at Port Elizabeth, N.J., by a bomb apparently planted by an anti-Castro refugee group. The explosion caused no injuries but put a small dent in the starboard side of the hull of the 530-foot Ivan Shepetkov, a Coast Guard spokesman said. There was no damage to the interior of the ship. A man claiming to represent a Cuban anti-Communist group, Omega 7, telephoned the press in New York shortly after the 12:40 A.M. blast and said a frogman attached the explosive to the bottom of the ship. The vessel had notified the Coast Guard a half hour earlier of a possible swimmer in the vicinity.

Strike Halts Tramway

A handful of employees on the shift at the Roosevelt Island tramway staged a wildcat job action Wednesday night over their right back on the island. According to F. Ozerka, chief engineer of the tramway, the men—members of the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 30, A.F.L.-C.I.O.—walked off job at 10:30 P.M., cutting off service and halting tramway operations. The strike ended at 5 A.M. Friday, one hour before the tramway was to start up for the day. An official said that negotiations with Urban Development Corporation, which operates the tramway, have been set for next week.

2 Admit Faking Accidents

Two men pleaded guilty in Federal court in Brooklyn to charges of faking automobile accidents to collect $1 in insurance. Marcel H. Weiss, 26, old, of 84 Ross Street, and Nech Werzberger, 22, of 148 Hayward St., both in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn, were said to have collected the money by buying damaged cars, then reporting accidents in which damages allegedly occurred. A 1 man involved in the scheme, J. Wohlender, 22, of 1416 43d St., Borough Park, Brooklyn, had pleaded guilty to the same charges Sept.

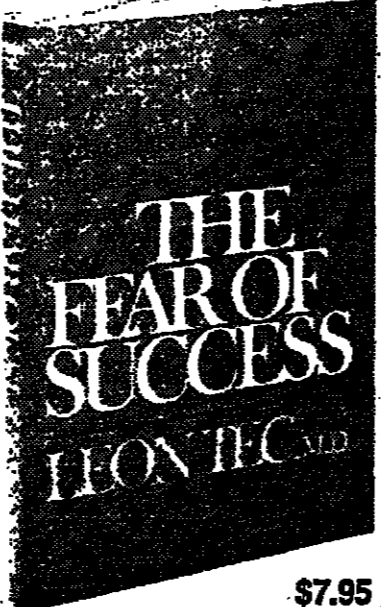

Retail Sales Increase

Even taking inflation into account, retail dollar sales in five major categories showed an increase last week, according to a survey by Productivity magazine. The survey reported a 1.7 percent increase in sales of tobacco products, alcoholic beverages, confectionery, paper products, and packaged ice cream. Tobacco sales grew 5.7 percent from year before, with filter cigarettes rising a 7.1 percent rise and cigars a 1.1 percent rise. In alcoholic beverages there was a 2.2 percent rise, with sales 5.5 percent higher. Confectionery sales increased 6.6 percent, paper products 1.7 percent and packaged ice cream 8.5 percent.

But the effort was rendered moot when the owner—acting fully within the law, officials note—sent in workmen on a recent weekend day who obliterated the distinctive design features. "It was perfectly legal, but reprehensible," Representative Edward I. Koch, Democrat of Manhattan, insisted. Mr. Koch, whose district includes the Cherokee Club site, had sought to aid those seeking to get the structure declared a landmark.

Events in Dispute
A member of Mr. Koch's staff, Iris Soodak, said that the building's new owner, Louis Evangelista, had agreed last month to meet with local residents who wanted the facade preserved, and had given her the impression that the facade would not be touched until such a meeting was held. Instead, she said, during the last week-end in August, just before the meeting was to take place, the stonework and carvings were wiped out. They included a pair of Indian heads over the arched entrance, floral motifs over the building's granite half-columns, and the letters that spelled out the name of the building itself, a Romanesque-revival structure designed by James Gwynn.

Mr. Evangelista and an associate, Norman Israel, denied that they had ever agreed to refrain from disturbing the facade. Mr. Israel said that shortly before the scheduled meeting mentioned by Mr. Koch's aide, the city's Buildings Department ordered the owner to "remove all hazardous ornamentation and decoration, and that's what we did." Cornelius F. Dennis, Manhattan borough superintendent of the Buildings Department, said that while Mr. Evangelista had acted within his rights, he had not been "ordered to remove the architectural decoration of the front wall." As for the effort to get the building declared a landmark, which was supported by Community Board 8, Mr. Israel said the building had been vacant two years and added: "If they wanted it as a landmark, they should have done it when it was a health hazard and nuisance to the neighbors." Brent L. Brandenburg, a neighborhood resident who sought landmark status for the disputed site, said that the Landmarks Commission had responded inadequately and needed reform. The commission chairman, Beverly Moss Spatt, said, "We decided it was a good Romanesque revival building, but it did not meet our architectural mandate."

Floral motifs over granite half-columns have been hacked away.

City Approves Trust for Building Museum of Modern Art Complex

By GLENN FOWLER

The Museum of Modern Art cleared its final governmental obstacle yesterday in its effort to build a condominium apartment tower above an expansion of its galleries on 53d Street.

The City Board of Estimate voted unanimously, after hearing arguments for more than two hours, to approve a controversial trust arrangement that would permit diversion from the city to the museum of about $1 million a year in real estate taxes on the condominium units.

Earlier this summer, the State Legislature passed enabling laws, heeding the museum's plea that its future would be endangered unless it was permitted to expand and to finance the project with what otherwise would be property taxes payable to the city.

Beame's Backing

Mayor Beame made one of his rare appearances in the Board of Estimate chamber at City Hall yesterday to muster support for ratification of the state act that created a Trust for Cultural Resources. The trust is to serve as the conduit for payments in lieu of taxes that will go to the museum instead of the city. It is an essential device because the nonprofit museum cannot legally enter the development business.

"The Museum of Modern Art is a unique and valuable cultural resource for our city," Mr. Beame said as he cast his four votes for the proposal. "It's one of the very few cultural institutions that has never received a subsidy from the city, so it certainly deserves our help in its survival."

Before the vote, opponents of the trust argued that it would amount to a giveaway of future city tax revenues at a time of extreme municipal fiscal stringency.

"We're building a palace of gold when we can't complete half-finished schools," said G. Oliver Koppell, Assemblyman from the Bronx, who led the opposition to the state Legislature. "The wealthy patrons of the museum mounted a tremendous lobbying effort. If they sincerely want to expand the galleries, they might shift their energies to raising funds for the project instead of pleading for special tax treatment from the city."

The Community Service Society also opposed the measure, urging that the city support the museum by making annual appropriations, as it does for other cultural institutions, instead of committing potential tax revenue for many future years.

Spokesmen for Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, the Brooklyn Museum and other cultural organizations contended that the trust was appropriate. Martin E. Segal, the city's Commissioner of Cultural Affairs, noted that the Museum of Modern Art actively promoted educational activities, including free admission to art students and to elementary school pupils.

Assurances Received

The museum says it needs $17 million for its gallery expansion and $23 million for the apartment tower. Although Richard E. Oldenburg, the museum's director, said he could not reveal specific details, it is understood that Arden Properties, which recently completed another luxury condominium, the Olympic Tower on Fifth Avenue, is the prospective developer.

Before voting in favor of the trust arrangement, Board of Estimate members received assurances from Charles M. Blieberg, counsel to City Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin, that the city would not be liable in the event that bonds sold by the trust to finance the project were to default.

Nyquist Agrees to Allow New York To Shorten the City's School Days

By LEONARD RUDER

The State Education Commissioner yesterday reluctantly allowed the New York City Board of Education to continue its policy of shortened school days during the current academic year.

But the Commissioner, Ewald B. Nyquist, told the board that he would not allow reduced school time next year. The board has said that the lack of funds made it impossible to restore regular school days for the academic year that got under way here Monday.

Saying that he was "fully aware" of the severe financial crisis confronting the city and its school system, Mr. Nyquist declared: "I deplore the reduction of instructional time as a device for dealing with that crisis."

He called on the board "to seek ways" of restoring the reduced school time as soon as possible. Last September the city board cut 45 minutes from the length of school days twice a week as part of an agreement with the United Federation of Teachers that ended a five-day strike by teachers. Tied to the reduction in instructional time for pupils was the loss of two preparation or free periods by teachers.

The board has estimated that the two reductions saved the system more than $30 million a year. The agreement with the union stipulates that the board cannot restore pupil time without restoring the two lost preparation periods.

Mr. Nyquist made his comments in a letter sent to Robert J. Christen, the president of the school board, and Irving Anker, the school chancellor. The two city school officials had asked the Commissioner to allow the system to maintain the reduced school day despite the enactment last November of new state standards.

The Commissioner said that the shortened time violated the state regulations, calling for five hours of instruction daily in elementary schools and five and a half hours in junior high school and intermediate schools.

On those days when the shortened schedules are in effect, he said, the city schools do not meet the standards, even though the total instructional time in the elementary schools came to, according to the system's request, 26 hours a week, or an hour more than the weekly minimum.

Gov. Grasso Denies Charge of Sex Bias

Gov. Ella T. Grasso of Connecticut, answering criticism that she has too few women in her administration, said 208 of her 880 top state appointees were women. Irene Sofian Herman of Stamford, the state coordinator of the National Organization for Women, asked the Governor how many of her appointments to key positions were men and how many were women. Governor Grasso said two of the 20 state commissioners and four of the 20 deputy commissioners were women.

Miss Herman said in a letter to the Governor, "Two out of more than 20 commissioner positions is not a particularly meaningful proportion of women, who comprise more than 53 per cent of the population. The Governor responded that former Gov. Thomas J. Meskill appointed 258 women to top positions during his four years in office.

HOW TO MAKE STOCKBROKERS REFUND YOUR LOSSES!

Rarely does a book have a major impact on the thinking of an entire nation, but the "stockbroker's ripoff" is rapidly approaching that stature

WHY?

Because the utter simplicity of the truths that lie within the covers of this book — in our age of intellectual mumbo jumbo — is like a breath of fresh air for a world too long saturated by myths, guilt-inducing rhetoric, and foundationless traditions.

If you've ever found yourself coming out on the short end of the stick — you'll very quickly understand why "the stockbroker's ripoff" has made an almost unbelievably sudden and dramatic impact on readers throughout America. Because if you heed the realities exposed in this book, there will be fewer occasions when you'll be scratching your head and trying to figure out why a situation you thought you had under control ended up falling apart at the seams.

TO BE RIPPED OFF OR NOT TO BE RIPPED OFF? — THAT IS THE QUESTION.

Getting ripped off is a common thread that runs through virtually every facet of life. After clearing away all of the academic nonsense — all of the irrelevant fat — knowing the facts is, plain and simple, the crucial factor that decides the outcome of most events.

Even if you're a "successful" person, there are moments when you are subtly ripped off by others without being aware of it. (Those "others" I am talking about may include some so-called friendly stockbrokers whom you come in contact with during your normal day-to-day activities.) You may only recognize the results when you have lost part or all of your savings—a "game" that's lost!

M.A.C. Negotiating to Sell Bonds To Meet New York's Cash Needs

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

The Municipal Assistance Corporation is negotiating with banks and other financial institutions to sell $250 million in corporation bonds so that New York State can meet a critical cash payment later this fall.

This effort has, in turn, delayed the possible completion of another transaction being sought by corporation officials for New York City — the so-called "stretch out" of payments on existing M.A.C. bonds, which is aimed at making $175 million available to city coffers later this year.

Details of these twin actions—designed to help the state and the city meet their essential cash needs at a time when both their budgets are under tight constraint—were disclosed in conversations this week with knowledgeable officials.

At Stake in Transaction

Both the city and the state have much at stake in the two transactions, the officials said.

Arthur Levitt, the State Comptroller, needs $250 million in cash to redeem notes he issued last November in order to make an emergency loan to the city. When he made that loan, part of $750 million in emergency payments at the height of the city's fiscal emergency, he was given $250 million in long-term M.A.C. bonds as collateral.

Now Mr. Levitt must find some way to sell those bonds to use the cash to redeem the state's notes.

At the same time, the city wants to reduce the amount of debt service payments it is scheduled to meet in the next five years on existing M.A.C. bonds that were purchased by banks, the municipal employees pension system and the city's sinking fund. There are $1.8 billion in such bonds owned by these three groups.

Some $175 million in amortization payments are due next February for these bonds, for example. Earlier this year, Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the M.A.C., launched negotiations with the bond holders to accept a delay in the amortization payment.

A cash "cushion" of $175 million, stemming from such a delay, would mean that the city would not be in such tight fiscal constraints in the spring, when many people feel it is likely to need every spare bit of cash to repay its short-term loans from the Federal Government.

Whether it has all the cash it needs depends largely on the effectiveness of its broad spending cuts—and some of the city's fiscal monitors question whether those cuts are taking place as quickly as they are supposed to.

The efforts to get this $175 million have, however, met with substantial resistance from the banks, according to knowledgeable officials. The banks, which own about $1 billion in M.A.C. bonds, were said to be reluctant to make another financial sacrifice that, in this instance, would permit the city to use the cash for its own purposes.

As for the effort to sell $250 million in M.A.C. bonds owned by Mr. Levitt, officials said there were basically three options on how this would be accomplished.

First, banks and financial institutions might organize a syndicate and simply buy Mr. Levitt's bonds outright, furnishing him with the cash to meet his $250 million in note payments in November.

10-Year Bonds Planned

Second, the M.A.C. would issue new bonds of roughly 10-year maturity and use the proceeds to liquidate Mr. Levitt's bonds, which are 15 to 20 years in maturity. The problem with this idea is that, although Mr. Levitt would get the cash he needs—the city is thought to be so strapped that it could not afford to meet the debt service cost in the next five years on bonds of shorter maturity.

The M.A.C. has thus reportedly asked the banks to agree to buy the new bonds but to postpone acceptance of any payment of principal until the sixth year of their maturity. Such an agreement would substantially reduce the debt service cost in the first five years, since the city would only be paying interest in that period.

There is a third option, according to officials. It calls for the M.A.C. to issue the new bonds, but also to get the banks and the pension funds to agree to accept a delay in the payment of principal on the bonds they already own from purchases earlier this year and last year.

Furs— Restful Loveliness

By ENID NEMY

Thank goodness! We're back to lovely fur coats, at least at Ben Kahn, where designs by Halston are being featured and at Bergdorf Goodman, which is carrying on in the best tradition of the late Emeric Partos.

The first two shows of the season, held this week, didn't dazzle or knock out any eyeballs with wild colors or offset combinations. They were, in fact, quite restful, which often happens when one watches the work of designers who are doing what they believe in, rather than striving for effect.

Halston's furs were—what can one say other than that they were obvious. Halston, simple, well-bred and so beautifully cut they looked effortless.

Halston, and the Kahn organization, both possess the assurance, self-confidence, call it what you will, to let well enough alone and, fortunately for anyone in the market for a fur this season, Bergdorf's is doing the same thing.

The theory seems to be that fiddling with Russian sable, Canadian fisher and top quality mink skins is on a par with adding chopped eggs to caviar. It can be done, but why?

Luxury Personified To get back to that sable and fisher, furs that are almost indistinguishable. (At the Kahn show, Ernest Graf, the president, mistook fisher for sable until the coat was almost on top of him, at which point he said, "Well, no matter, the price is very similar.")

Both furs have always been at the top of the luxury class, and deservedly so. To look at them is to want to smuggle inside them, but this year the skins seem particularly luminous and opulent. Maybe that's a built-in attraction of something that is unattainable to most people.

"Mink represents a good investment today," said Leonard Hankin, executive vice president of Bergdorf's. "It's increased in price, but relatively little. Prices in some of the other furs have gone through the roof."

One can expect to pay from $6,000 to $7,500 (and more) for a good mink this year. Sable can run between $20,000 and $25,000 and Canadian fisher is in the area of $15,000. A Montana lynx coat that sold for $4,500 last year is now about $7,000.

Not a Season for Fads And yet, business is booming, perhaps because this isn't a season of fur fantasies or fads, and one's investment is liable to look as good some years hence, without remodeling.

If two shows indicate what's in store, and these two certainly may, there will be a lot of belted wrap-arounds, with little or no trimming. There also will be almost as many of the coats that have no apparent fastening, which look their best when they are held closed with one hand or, for that matter, simply left open to swing with the elements.

There's a definite Paul Poiret influence in some of the fuller designs, with an almost fanlike swirl of skirt.

The honors for Russian broadtail, which is as thin as a crepe but a lot glossier, were shared by Kahn and Bergdorf's, as were lynx, lamb and chinchilla. However each establishment had its own specialty as well. At Kahn, it was fox, in all its variations, from silver to Norwegian blue to gray-touched brown and blue-touched gray. At Bergdorf's, it was silky Lakoda seal.

And if anyone is wondering what happened to raccoon, try thinking of Bergdorf's floor-length hooded cape or Halston's slim and elegant design with double-effect pockets and cuffs. Also try thinking of prices that have about doubled.

The Ben Kahn/Halston show, in the Grand Ballroom of the Plaza Hotel was for friends and for customers, past, present and prospective. Bergdorf's show, held in the store, was a $35 a person bon voyage benefit for the New York City Ballet.

Parents/Children

Parental Nudity: Bad for Youngsters

By RICHARD FLASTE

There's the modern parent. See him? He's the one trying so hard to look comfortable. He knows that parents often unwittingly convey their own anxieties, their own hang-ups to their children. So he tries to make it easy, even in such tension-filled areas as sexuality and nudity.

But while this parent goes about the job of being modern—undressing in front of his children, bathing with them, all the while appearing not to give it a thought—some traditional doubts persist in the back of his mind. Isn't parental nudity supposed to be dangerous for children to see?

According to at least one line of thinking, it is. Orthodox Freudians are concerned about childhood sexuality, the child's attraction to the parent of the opposite sex and rivalry with the parent of the same sex. It's the Oedipal conflict, that is said to develop around 4 or 5, and the child needs to resolve it to pursue a normal life. Parents, according to this point of view, would be well advised not to complicate matters by being "overstimulating."

A Psychoanalyst's View

One prominent New York psychoanalyst (he withheld his name because he felt it was inappropriate for his patients to know his thinking) answered a question about parental nudity this way:

"In general there is disapproval of such a practice because the sexual stimulation has an adverse effect on children's development. It is a fairly common finding that homosexuals were overstimulated by their mothers who exposed themselves, and the result was that they turned away from women and interest in normal sexual development."

"Keeping a child in a state of suppressed sexual excitement," the analyst went on, "can interfere with the development of talents and skills; sometimes language development is impaired."

But not all authorities on child development hold to this line. Dr. Sol Gordon, director of the Institute for Family Research and Education at Syracuse University, asserts that the notion of parents being too seductive or overstimulating is "one of the serious impediments to parents being sex educators."

"In all the studies we reviewed," he said, "less than 20 percent of the parents were reported by their children to have been the sex educators of those children—and these parents aren't ignorant."

Dr. Gordon urges parents of young children to dress and undress in front of them, to bathe with them and to do those things even if they feel a trifle uncomfortable about it.

"In general it's a good idea," he said, "because it's a marvelous opportunity for parents to be askable about their bodies."

There are times, however, when parental nudity is inappropriate even in Dr. Gordon's eyes. If a parent is more than just a trifle uncomfortable, for instance, "If it paralyzes you," he said, "don't do it."

Also, while some children are able weird," and it's embarrassing happens the beginning of alienation child from parent.

A psychiatrist who agrees Dr. Gordon that parental nudity be helpful in the early years. William Hetzkecker, professor of psychiatry at Temple Univ. where he trains child-care workers, says he has seen children who are afraid of their parents' bodies.

But Dr. Hetzkecker has a what more traditional view of often happens, especially as a reaches puberty, a period of turbulent sexual development.

Child May Be Adverse

He described the switch to cal privacy in the school years similar to "the privacy of the many children strive for. When comes to the sensitive subject of nudity, he said, "the child may not want to be in on it."

At puberty, he said, parental nudity may indeed be too stimulating to deal with normally. "Children often pare themselves unfavorably parents of the same sex," he said.

Suppose a child seems embarrassed and the parents take offense, "well, he'll just have to over it." Dr. Hetzkecker believes that if such be the case, the parents are probably wrong.

He said they ought to realize family life is a matter of social tact, with each member requiring certain kinds of behavior from others.

Parental nudity, he said, "very well be a good subject renegotiation."

In general, one psychologist said, parental nudity in front of young children is "a good idea because it's a marvelous opportunity for parents to be asked about their bodies."

At $20 or $1,550, Everything Is a Bargain

By LISA HAMMEL

Special to The New York Times

PLAINVIEW, L. I.—If you say the magic word "bargain," it is usually enough to stir the interest of even the most indifferent shopper. And if you add that the bargain applies to sleek, modern furniture from some of the top European designers, the kind usually available only through decorators and architects, you will probably have the consumer of modern furniture beating a path to your door.

The door in this case is a big plate glass one in the one-story building here that belongs to Atelier International, a firm that sells top-of-the-line designer furniture and accessories from Italy and Germany. This morning, at 9:30, that glass door in the firm's new Long Island warehouse will open on a two-day sale of furniture and lighting. The warehouse will be open until 8 this evening, and from 9:30 A.M. to 6 P.M. tomorrow.

Included in the sale will be showroom samples, slightly damaged items, discontinued models and inventory overstock. There will be a few hundred items in the sale, from single pieces to dozens in a given line.

Varied Seating Units

Among this selection are pieces in plastic, chrome, marble and wood—natural, lacquered or stained. Upholstery fabrics include calf, suede, velvet and knits.

The number of items—the vast majority of which is seating—runs only to a few hundred. But within that, the selection varies.

There are, for example, only a handful of armchairs by Le Corbusier, but there are perhaps two dozen seating units, from lounge chairs to three-seater sofas by Afra and Tobia Scarpa. Because this squooshy leather seating is all samples, made here recently under license by Atelier, they are priced from $50 to $1,550, considerably lower than the net price of the imports.

Have you had your eye on one of those wooden Magistretti dining chairs? There are rows of them here, with and without arms, and in brilliant paintbox colors, with upholstered or sea grass slip seats.

The chairs are $32 for the armless, $36 for those with arms, so priced because slight surface faults in the wood necessitated their being lacquered instead of color-stained as they usually are.

Gerd Lange Stacking Chairs

And if you're in the market for stacking chairs, the Gerd Lange plastic shells with chrome tubular bases are a good buy at $65 for four.

Also in the sale are a number of dining tables, priced from around $200 to $300; desks, bookcases, occasional tables, coffee tables, file cabinets, and oversized office storage units that could be used as buffets.

A few individual items that are great bargains include such things as a drum-shaped nest of four white plastic tables by Fratini at $20, and a tomato-red plastic cocktail table at the same price.

The lighting, mostly Italian, ranges from about $20 to $50. But you can also get one of the famous Castiglioni lamps—the one that soars up in an arc of metal from a rectangular marble base—at $300, which is less than half the list price.

The warehouse is off Exit 46 of the Long Island Expressway, and then about a quarter of a mile on the service road (Executive Drive) to the corner of Express Street.

Jewish Museum's Reproductions, From Middle Ages to the Present

By LAWRENCE VAN GELDER

Spanning the centuries from the Middle Ages to the 20th and the globe from the Middle East to France and Britain, a selection of reproductions from the collection of the Jewish Museum is being introduced for sale to the public.

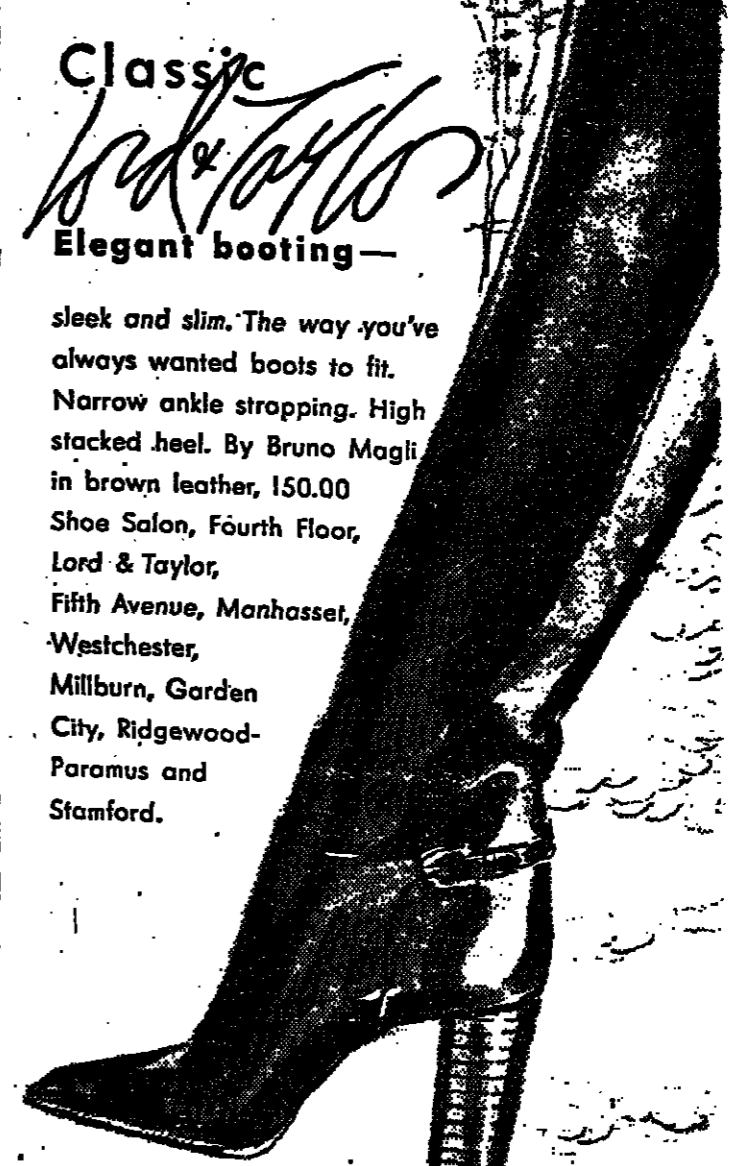

Among the authentic reproductions, executed for the most part in silver or pewter—and ranging in price from $150 for a duplicate of a 1900 Middle Eastern good-luck charm in pewter to $75 for a reproduction of an 18th-century Passover Seder plate in pewter—are amulets, rings and monarhs.

According to a spokesman for the museum, almost all the 16 reproductions in the collection are available now at the museum, situated at 1109 Fifth Avenue, near 92d Street. The rest are expected shortly, and eventually the reproductions will be offered for sale through retail shops and charitable outlets throughout the country.

Among the reproductions are three "hamsas"—good-luck charms in the shape of a hand outstretched to ward off evil—and two rings. One ring is in a 18th-century Persian style inscribed with an evil repelling inscription in Hebrew. The other is in 18th-century Italian style, used in weddings and surmounted with a tiny house to express the wish that the wearer will be blessed with a good home life.

Also in the collection is a reproduction of a ketubah, or marriage contract, originally painted on parchment in Trieste in 1755. The museum notes that the contract is available in two forms.

One carries the authorized text of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. The museum notes that the other, free of inscription, is for those who wish to inscribe it with an Orthodox text or with their own contract.

Willoughby Walk Tenants Gain in Uphill Brooklyn Fight

By ALAN S. OSER

too early for the tenants at Willoughby Walk apartments in the Clinton section of Brooklyn to fling signs into the air, but they have had the longest part of the road—a hard-won victory.

It is almost 10 years ago that Pratt bought one building in this building's middle-income complex as a student dormitory. Pratt took an option on the two others, a Chicago-based owner.

Willoughby Walk was in economic decline at the time, but the racially-integrated tenants didn't know it. They only that the modern apartments in 16-story buildings, which went in late 1950's with a 4½ percent mortgage insured by the Federal Government, were a good deal in a superior neighborhood.

Pratt's agitation obstructed the sale, and led ultimately to Government takeover of the mortgage by the Federal Urban Development Administration. The buildings were to be sold to tenants, not for use as an educational institution," said Jones, who led the tenants' campaign for seven years until last year.

The tenants in the beginning now was that the mortgage had defaulted for more than 10 months. What they did know was that the property was in dire need of repairs. Sidewalks and a parking lot were properly functioning elevators.

The New York Times

on apartment appliances. With H.U.D. in command, the new management made repairs at a cost of $600,000, Mr. Jones said.

Amid all this, the tenants decided they wanted to buy the buildings themselves. Lengthy negotiations with the Government on a sales price began.

Those negotiations ended last year. The tenants could buy their two buildings—with 287 apartments in each—for $6.1 million, of which $122,000 would be in cash and $5,978,000 on a 40-year note repayable at 6.5 percent interest.

So it comes about that an offering statement has been issued and starting only last July the Willoughby Walk tenants, now organized as Willoughby Walk Cooperative Apartments Inc., have begun a campaign to sell the apartments as cooperatives. In terms of market prices for comparable apartments in this area, the apartments are bargains, the tenant leaders say. That is why outsiders are "knocking on our doors," Mr. Jones said.

But the agreement with H.U.D. requires that 75 percent of the apartments be sold to tenants in residence—and that within six months. The figure was a compromise. The Government agency at first insisted that 90 percent be tenants in residence.

One current problem is that H.U.D. wants the sale to be "as is," while the tenants feel the Government should continue to make repairs.

The tenants have until Jan. 30 to succeed in the sales campaign. So far, commitments have been received from about a quarter of the tenants, Mr. Jones said. Down payment requirements range from $800 for an efficiency apartment to $2,500 for a three-bedroom unit. The monthly carrying charges, ranging from $138 for an efficiency to $380 for a three-bedroom apartment, have been skewed so that the charge is lower than current rents in the smallest units but higher for the large units. Two-bedroom apartments, now renting at $230 to $240 a month, will have monthly charges of $288 to $314.

As the cooperative advocates see it, higher rents are inevitable if H.U.D. sells the property to another operator rather than the tenants. And tenant cohesion and morale have gained through the long years of struggle to "save our building" and have provided new ownership incentives.

"Willoughby Walk is different from other buildings," said Mr. Jones, a court stenographer who with his friends, helped over the years by officeholders at various governmental levels, is seeing a dream come true. "There's a neighborly setting. People know each other. We have a community fair with 2,000 to 3,000 people every year on the Fratt campus, and there's a choral group and various clubs.

"Through a crisis people got to know each other, and we've kept that cohesiveness."

Co-op City Fears Effect of Strike

By LENA WILLIAMS

Many of the tenants at Co-op City fear that the strike of nearly 250 maintenance, security and office workers there sharply challenges the tenant's contention that they can avoid an increase in their apartment maintenance charges.

In June the tenants of Co-op City were given six months to prove they could "obviate or reduce the necessity" for the 25 percent rise in maintenance charges that state housing officials say is necessary.

"This strike could very well upset our plans," said a seven-year resident of Co-op City. "It didn't come at an opportune time. We've just gotten over a rent strike and now this happens."

Leaders of Local 32E of the Building Service Employees Union that represents 200 workers at Co-op City are asking for a minimum 41 percent wage increase. Local 153 of the Office and Professional Employees International Union, some 50 office workers, is negotiating for an entirely new contract with a pay increase, in addition to more personal, sick and vacation leave.

11 Said to Forge Cigarette Stamps Worth $3 Million

By FARNSWORTH FOWLE

The New York State Commissioner of Taxation and Finance yesterday announced the arrest of 11 persons, most of them cigarette dealers, on charges of counterfeiting state cigarette tax stamps by which they allegedly siphoned $3 million from government treasuries.

"It was such a skillful job of copying the machine that it was very difficult to detect," the Commissioner, James H. Tully Jr., said of the alleged counterfeiters' efforts.

He was flanked at a news conference in his World Trade Center office by Ivan E. Izbary, the city's Finance Commissioner. Izbary's staff had assisted the state in the investigation, according to Commissioner Tully.

Commissioner Tully said the suspects would have grossed nearly $6 million a year had they been able to continue their operations.

Three counterfeiting machines, along with originals from which they had been copied, and more than 50,000 cartons of contraband cigarettes, were seized Tuesday night and Wednesday in raids on registered warehousing and wholesaling concerns in Brooklyn and in Deer Park, L.I.

These arrested included Morris Kessler of Brooklyn, described by Mr. Tully as management group that recently took over the 35-building complex, after its own 13-month strike, said yesterday afternoon that the group was meeting with Local 32E to discuss specific demands.

"We want to end this strike as soon as possible," said Mr. Rosen. "We will not call in outside people to handle our maintenance here while the strike is in process. That would be considered union-busting, and we are not out to destroy the trade union."

Tenants, however, have organized special cleanup and patrol groups in each apartment complex to handle problems that may occur if the strike is a long one.

"Contrary to what everyone outside thinks, this place is not overflowing with garbage," said Mady Weitz, a resident, who admits she sympathizes with the strikers but disapproves of the methods they are using. "We have special patrols out with walkie-talkies looking for any signs of trouble," she said. "These are our homes and we plan to protect them."

mastermind of the ring, with a record of criminal activities dating to 1945 and associations with a brother of Thomas Eboli, reputed head of a Mafia family.

"Regrettably," Mr. Tully stressed, most of those arrested were "legitimate businessmen" who had become involved in the tax-fraud conspiracy.

Among them was Milton Bloomrosen of 174 East 82d Street, president of William Bloomrosen & Sons Inc. of Brooklyn, who was said to have turned over his licensed stamping machine for the copying.

Two of the other machines were recovered in a Queens warehouse owned by Valley Stream Distributors Inc. of Deer Park, also a registered cigarette agent. An owner of the company, David Schussman, of Dix Hills, L. I., was arrested there along with Charles McCullough and Robert Schmeedman, both of Philadelphia, who were said to be associates of Mr. Kessler.

The others arrested were Philip Katz of Ridgewood, N. J., Joseph Pierre of Brooklyn, Thomas Indell of Brentwood, L. I., Pedro Rodriguez of Manhattan, John Virrakis of Manhattan, and José Bode of Queens.

He explained that unlike the vast bootleg market in unstamped cigarettes in the city, which sell under the counter at cut-rate prices, the counterfeit, stamped enabled the alleged conspirators to sell them at the regular market price. There was a 50-50 split, he said, between counterfeiters and sellers.

The New York State tax is 15 cents a package, and the city imposes an additional 8-cent levy.

Celebrating 'Kate' at the Regency

By WALTER KERR

WHEN THE REGENCY Theater, having finally done with the Brothers Warner, begins its Katharine Hepburn retrospective with a double bill of "Christopher Strong" and "A Woman on Sunday," there'll be a lot of people who'll be biding their time until they see their favorite Hepburn films again, perhaps, or "African Queen" and those others who dash in the ones they've never seen before. I've never even heard of "Sylvia Scarlett" or "Spitting Image," two films, spanning a stretch from 1932 to 1962, will arrive at the theater on Broadway near 67th Street in due time, with "Holiday" and "Suddenly Last Summer" wrapping everything up in mid-November.

"Me, I'm going back to 'Alice Adams' because I always go back to 'Alice Adams.' (Won't have to wait very long, either, because it's scheduled for Sept. 26-28, scarcely a passionate heart's beat away.) Why I ought to go back to 'Alice Adams' when I ought to be making time for James M. Barrie's 'Quality Street,' a performance I scarcely remember? Possibly because I think it the lady's own best work, possibly because I think it the best film in which she appeared. Possibly, see Continued on Page C8.

Art of the American Past Gets Its Due

By HILTON KRAMER

THE CLASSICS of 19th-century American painting, which not so long ago were gathering dust and contempt in the storerooms of American museums, have lately been enjoying a new vogue. Art historians no longer risk their reputations by specializing in this material, and art collectors no longer earn the condescension of their peers for investing sizable sums of money in the pictures. The momentum of revival, which was swiftly gaining speed before the Bicentennial celebration, has this year reached avalanche force as the result of that event.

Thus it is that New York City has not one but two museums showing this fall focusing primarily though not exclusively, on these 19th-century painters. The first of these shows, "American Art From the Collection of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller 3d," has just opened at the Whitney Museum of American Art, where it remains on view through Nov. 7. The second, entitled "The Natural Paradise," opens at the Museum of Modern Art on Oct. 1.

The Rockefeller Collection, on view this weekend, offers an easy opportunity to gain—or regain—acquaintance with this art. It actually embraces a period larger than the 19th century, and includes some significant examples of 18th century painting and some less than significant examples of 20th-century painting in addition to some minor sculpture. Indeed, some of the most appealing pictures—Joseph Badger's portrait of Anna Porter Brown and John Singleton Copley's portrait of Mrs. Daniel Sargent—belong to the 18th century

MAHOPAC FARM PLAY

The Mahopac Farm Playhouse, in upper Westchester, on Route 6 in Baldwin Place, has been so busy that it is running past its regular season. The playhouse will be open at 8:30 P.M. tonight and tomorrow and next Friday and Saturday with the stage play "The Boys in the Band," the former Broadway hit that dealt with homosexuals (the theater suggests "parental guidance" as far as bringing youngsters is concerned). If you want to make a day of it at this rural theatrical outpost, you may visit its Americana museum one hour before showtime or, tomorrow, take in a flea market that runs from noon to dusk, with more than 50 vendors hawking things that range from shock to antiques. Admission: $5. Information: (914) 628-1169.

STAMFORD ANTIQUES

The only show that doesn't highlight boats at the Yacht Haven West Marina in Stamford, Conn., is the Stamford Antiques Fair, which unfolds today through Sunday. The marina has a large indoor facility, and you can reach it by car or boat, at the foot of Washington Boulevard, off Exit 7 on the Connecticut Turnpike. The show, open 1 to 10 P.M. today and tomorrow (to 8 on Sunday), is well stocked with ancient objects from the Republic's early days. Among the 100 exhibits, you will find quilts, farm tools, furniture, clocks, weather vanes, toys, buttons and bows. Admission: $2. Free parking, and you may buy something to eat as you wish and sit and observe the seascape before you. Information: (203) 359-4500.

WHITE PLAINS FLOWERS

You may have missed the renowned Chelsea flower show in the Royal Hospital Gardens in London, but you can catch a smaller-scale version in White Plains, where they have copied the original for the fourth annual Burke Garden Festival and Flower Show. The show, open today and tomorrow, 11 A.M. to 7 P.M., and Sunday, 11 to 5, fills the quadrangle formed by the Burke Center's buildings at 785 Mamaroneck Avenue. It takes place under tents, and among the things that you will see are a knot garden of herbs, a colonial dye garden, an exhibit depicting how American Indians used plants and displays by nurserymen and growers. Also: bonsai, succulents, flower arrangements and more of the same, enough to make a green thumb flush with joy. Admission: $2.50; 50 cents for 12's and under. Information: (914) 948-0050.

RIG RODGERS & HART YEAR

A new musical revue about two fellows who turned out six scores for musicals in London and New York in one season opens Saturday night at 8:30. "Rodgers & Hart, 1928" is just what its title proclaims, and it does what it sets out to do with 26 songs and dances from the half-dozen shows of that year by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart. The show runs this weekend and next, Saturdays at 8:30, Sundays at 4 P.M. (also next Monday at 8:30). Conceived and directed by Tran Wm. Rhodes, it is being presented by the All Souls Players, Lexington Avenue and 80th Street (LE 5-5530). Admission is free; first come, first served. Six shows in one season? Yes, count them: "Fifth Avenue Follies," "The Girl Friend," "The Garrick Gaieties," "Lido Lady," "Peggy-Ann" and "Betsy." Things have slowed down since then.

PARTY FOR POE

Edgar Allan Poe was a West Sideer once (also a Bronxite), and they have not forgotten him back on 84th Street, where he lived during the 1830's in the Brennan Mansion, between West End Avenue and Broadway. The fifth annual Edgar Allan Poe Festival takes place Saturday from 10 A.M. to 6 P.M., when West 84th Street between Broadway and Riverside Drive will be closed to wheeled traffic and open to merriment. The events include jazz by a five-piece band and demonstrations of their talent by occultists and mystics who work in palmistry, astrology, handwriting analysis and tarot cards. Anne Meara and Peter Max will make the scene and Engle Conrow will read "The Raven." Magicians, fire eaters, sword swallows and scads of craftsmen who will sell you all sorts of things. Admission free. If it rains, come back Sunday. Information: 580-9196.

JAMAICA BAY PAGEANT

Floyd Bennett Field is a large peninsula at the mouth of Jamaica Bay, part of the Gateway National Park, just north of the Marine Parkway Bridge, which connects the south end of Flatbush Avenue in Brooklyn to Jacob Riis Park. Saturday and Sunday, from 11 A.M. to 7 P.M., the field will come alive as the Jamaica Bay Council's formidably titled Fourth National Gateway Park Bicentennial Environmental Pageant pitches its tents and fills the day with music, speeches, dance and even theater pieces, as well as exhibits from four foreign countries, two other states and a host of Federal, state and city agencies. At 4:30 Saturday, the Coast Guard Band; at 4:30 Sunday, Peter Duchin and orchestra. Opening ceremonies at 2 on Saturday. You will see water labs, air monitors, postal histories, Girl Scout rug weaving and "a cubic display of history." All free. If it rains, things will go on in the hangars. Information: 474-6507.

John Corry

'Nanette' Producer Ready to Introduce Gershwin's 'Oh, Kay!'

IT'S IN THE AIR. I smell it," Cyma Rubin said. Mrs. Rubin was talking about the music of George Gershwin, or more precisely, about what she thinks will be a great new longing to hear the music of George Gershwin. It is one reason (there are others) why she is now producing a revival of "Oh, Kay!," which will cost $900,000 and most likely will reach Broadway late in the season. Gershwin musicals are not often revived, but Mrs. Rubin has been reluctant to allow revivals. But Mrs. Rubin persevered and negotiated, and last July she got the rights to "Oh, Kay!" from the Gershwin estate. Sydney Zelinka, who, among other things, wrote Phil Silvers' Sergeant Bilko shows and Jackie Gleason's "The Honeymooners" for television, is now rewriting the "Oh, Kay!" book.

Constant theatergoers will recall that the book, written by P.G. Wodehouse and Guy Bolton in 1926, was about bootleggers and social types in Southampton in the 1920's. Mr. Zelinka is updating it slightly, making it the 30's, and allowing "Oh, Kay!" to introduce what Mrs. Rubin calls "a whole new look." The look for "No, No Nanette," for example, which Mrs. Rubin also produced, was Art Deco; "Oh, Kay!" will be late Volstead Act elegance. Raoul Pène Du Bois will be the set designer, as well as associate producer, and Donald Saddler will be the choreographer.

When "Oh, Kay!" opened, it had Victor Moore, Gertrude Lawrence and Betty Compton in the cast. It also had a score that included "Do, Do, Do," "Someone to Watch Over Me," "Maybe" and "Clap Yo Hands." The new production will have all the old songs, and perhaps a few obscure numbers that were written but never done for "Oh, Kay!" Most likely, however, it will not have stars. Mrs. Rubin says she wants fresh faces.

It is generally agreed that Nancy Donohue, who plays Sister Rita in "The Runner Stumbles," is offering a luminous performance. Miss Donohue is serious about Sister Rita, in part because she was once a convent child herself, and in part because Sister Rita is simply a very good role. "When I was 20," Miss Donohue says, "and trying to get everything straightened out, my best friend, Mildred Dunnock's daughter, asked me what I wanted out of life. I decided that I wanted good plays, good directors, good parts. Now I'm happy, not happy the way I thought I'd be happy, but happy. Things worked out."

A few years ago, Miss Donohue was afflicted with a form of rheumatoid arthritis so severe she was told she could never appear on stage again. The illness, however, abated, leaving her free not only to act, but to draw as well. Miss Donohue designs and writes Crocus Cards, which are all-purpose greetings for almost everything. The other day, on the way in from her apartment in Connecticut, she designed one.

"Love is like Beethoven's Fifth," she read. "Just when you think there's nothing more in it for you, something comes along, throwing it into a new perspective..."

Miss Donohue turned the page of the Crocus Card.

Nancy Donohue in "The Runner Stumbles" "Once a convent child herself!"

politics and what happens to a woman in an election, will place the castle Ben Edwards will do the sets and the costumes, and Miss Fredrik says will be offered first out of town.

Then there is the trilogy by Mr. Ebb. The most ambitious of all Miss Fredrik's Mr. Horowitz works slowly, and while with a play he likes to try it out on New York. His trilogy, which Miss Fredrik's major piece of work, while at the same time it is more or less inexplicable, is a generational story about Wakefield is where Mr. Horowitz grew up. They are "Alfred the Great," "Our Father" and "Alfred Dies," and roughly speaking a man named Alfred, from age 40 to 60.

The play for Miss LeGallienne, who of Miss Fredrik's in Connecticut, "Watcher" by Barbara Wersba, Miss Fredrik in Westport, and then announced like to do it again, and since her work taken seriously, Miss Fredrik will be "The Dream Watcher" on Broadway. It is about a woman of 80 and a 1 in a way it is a love story. The woman explain to the boy that it is all right that it is all right to be an original.

The musical "Barnum" (Alexander Odically speculates about doing a musical too) has a book by Mark Bramble and music and lyrics by Harry Nilsson. Mr. Odically owned it for six months, and the play also in 1977. And, finally, there is the Marie Dressler play, Miss Fredrik's friend Jan Miner wanted to star in Miss Dressler; she knew that her friend might like to write one. She is now it together.

This year's hottest show on the provinces, if you think that way, has been on the Roof. It has been in Los Angeles, St. Louis, Washington, Toronto, Philadelphia, Chicago, and it seems to have set the all of those cities. "Fiddler" is a show making machine, and Dec. 20 it will be in New York, where it will open in the Wintz Motel, of course, will be Tevye, and, it does not like previews, there will be before "Fiddler" opens here, however in Miami, and then it will lay over. Then, at his own request, Jerome Robbins directed the original "Fiddler," will cover over the final rehearsals.

The music of John Kander and the Ebb will be put together in "a musical" called "2 by 5," which begins the Village Gate on Oct. 12 and opens 18. The "2" in the title refers to Mr. Ebb, and the "5" to the five people who will sing and dance to their music and Mr. Ebb have written "Cabaret," "The Happy Time," "Flora, the Red Zorba," and "2 by 5" will use score songs.

The show, which is directed by S. S. being produced by Jack Temchin and Mr. Temchin produced "El Grande" of the review that ran at the Plaza 4, and Miss Gordon produced "A Lyric Howard Samuels," which, while only business, at least played the Palace.

Uptown Broadway: The Broken Bells and Ballet Company, which is a variety of, among other things, the Troca Ballet and Sally Rand, will be at the B on Sept. 24 and 25. The producers also have the greatest female impersonator history of show business, and possibly 1

One can "On the Town," for example jama Game." have been special circum- 1 which such revivals have Jean Dalrymple at the New Center presented. pliously revivals of the great works in the American Musical Theater, as later and more briefly, did Richard Rodgers at the New York State Theater in Lincoln Center. But these were all brief runs, generally using the original settings and costumes, and all were subsidized in part.

Another type of musical revival has, in recent years, stood a chance. These were the camped-up musical nostalgia products, which started with "No, No, Nanette," went on with even more no-no "Irene," and finally went to their knees with the final no-no, "Good News," which happened to be some of the worst news of its current season. Yet the simple fact remains that the current trio of Broadway-revivals are for some uncommon reason new Broadway hits. Despite a certain surface generic similarity all three have taken different paths along the Great White Way. It is to be noted that "My Fair Lady" at the St. James Theater is a virtual reproduction of the great 1956 original regarding its direction, choreography, scenery and costumes. The "Guys and Dolls" at the Broadway Theater has retained the music and lyrics and the book, but it has a new staging, new scenery and costumes, and very much a new image. For this new "Guys and Dolls" has been moved uptown to Harlem and is now completely black. Probably the most radical changes are those which have occurred to the venerable "Threepenny Opera." Joseph Papp's production at Lincoln Center's Vivian Beaumont Theater, for it has been retranslated, remodeled and is quite different in tone and texture from the famous Marc Blitzstein adaptation that ran for years Off Broadway at the Theater de Lys.

What do these three pieces have in common? Well, one would like to say quality. It is true that each musical in its own way offers an extremely successful evening in the theater. But it must be conceded that there have been other perfectly successful revivals in the past that have not fared nearly as well. There must then be other factors that are at present touching some popular nerves of our time—and equal- ly clearly, those nerves are very different.

A Shavian Interpretation In the case of Herman Levin's production of "My Fair Lady" it is nostalgia pure and almost simple. Yet it seems, from inquiries, that the show is bringing in a young audience. Here the answer must be that we are acquiring a rather saner attitude to the whole business of theatrical revivalism and dramatic resurrection. Remember, "Hamlet" is a new play to you if you have never seen it before, and to a whole new generation of theatergoers "My Fair Lady," which is as much an opera as a musical, is nowadays legendary but unknown.

It is also very well done. Ian Richardson, given the unenviable job of launching into Rex Harrison's grace-notes, does wonderfully well, giving a new interpretation that is perhaps a good deal more valid from a Shavian point of view (he never lets us forget that this Lerner and Loewe musical, for all its musical dazzlement and ingenuity, is based on Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion." Everyone is lovelier. A newcomer, Christine Andreas, makes a glowing debut, with Robert Guillaume, Norma Donaldson, Ernestine Jackson, James Randolph and Ken Page, who, as Nicely-Nicely Johnson, has no intention of rocking that boat. The production could certainly have been more opulent, yet it is fresh and effective, and does not have that occasional air of reverential reproduction that is the one flaw in the new "Fair Lady."

There is certainly nothing reverential about the new "Threepenny Opera." It has been the proposition of the production that earlier versions and translations had been sanitized, and largely divested both of their political implications and sexual and scatological imagery. This new translation and production sets out to put the record right. Aided by the sensitive and forceful staging by Richard Foreman and the musical realizations of Stanley Silverman, both of which, if memory serves, seem to have been influenced by the Berliner Ensemble production,

"Bubbling Brown Sugar" and "Me and Bessie." Mr. Septee has decided to color the Runyonesque eccentrics black. Luckily it works. As in the case of "My Fair Lady," the show is beautifully cast, with Robert Guillaume, Norma Donaldson, Ernestine Jackson, James Randolph and Ken Page, who, as Nicely-Nicely Johnson, has no intention of rocking that boat. The production could certainly have been more opulent, yet it is fresh and effective, and does not have that occasional air of reverential reproduction that is the one flaw in the new "Fair Lady."

the cast, led by Raul Julia, as Mack the Knife, rip their way through this musical and dramatic masterpiece with love, guts and style.

Is this policy of new life for old musicals going to be a trend? These three examples are so divergent in their success and diffuse in their methods that it would be dangerous to make predictions. But it would certainly be nice to see some of the good old-time musicals again. Why they could bring "Fiddler on the Roof" back next. And as a matter of fact, they are.

style. Turn-of-the-century sopranos like Lilli Lehmann or Lillian Nordica might be singing Violetta in "La Traviata" one night, Brunnhilde four nights later, Norma the following week. It has been suggested that Miss Price is one of that breed, that she is now ready for Wagner as well as Mozart and Rossinian coloratura.

To Me, It's Just a Voice

But she herself is not so sure. "I'm against putting voices in categories," she says. "My voice? To me, it's just a voice." But if pressed, she describes herself as a lyric soprano who can also sing coloratura roles without any trouble.

She says she is not ready for Wagner, and that she probably never will develop into a Brunnhilde soprano. "Eve I could do," she says, referring to the heroine of "Die Meistersinger." "In about 10 years, Elsa and Elisabeth." Those are the leading soprano roles in "Lohengrin" and "Tannhauser."

Margaret Price is Welsh. She studied in London and made her operatic debut with the Welsh National Opera in 1961, singing Cherubino in "Le Nozze di Figaro." For years she was cast as Mozart soprano, and sang the central soprano parts in all the Mozart operas all over the world.

More recently, she has been turning to Verdi. In Munich she sang Amelia in "Simon Boccanegra," and this year Paris saw her as Desdemona for the first time. She also has sung Elisabetta in "Don Carlo" and Elena in "I Vespro Siciliani." She is looking forward to her first Norma, in Zurich three years from now. Norma is not a role that sopranos lightly approach.

By that time, even the Metropolitan Opera might be interested in her.

Despite gloomy predictions that Hollywood will soon expire in an epidemic of sequels, disasterdramas and nostalgic fever, Brian De Palma is defiantly sunny about the condition of the American film.

Brian De Palma, director of 'Obsession'... Coming next: a parapsychological horror film

Modesty prevents the 37-year-old director from citing himself as one of the top directing talents of the day, but critics have praised both his technical virtuosity and his quirky—some might say perverse—point of view.

'Carrie' is a parapsychological horror story set in an American Graffiti milieu, Mr. De Palma explained. 'It starts with Carrie getting her period for the first time, in the school shower, and it shows her hysterical reaction, as well as the reaction of the religious morality police in the West, the juxtaposition of sexuality and guilt, the concept of corruption and evil being engendered by women.'

In selecting films, Mr. De Palma said that he searches for material that will 'carry audiences into a surrealistic world, but not one so peculiar that they become disoriented. It takes a while for a director to know enough, to live enough, to have the ability to express what is on his mind and in his heart.

Terrence Malick is the most timid director of the decade. In 1973, when 'Badlands'—his harrowing, compassionate study of a pair of alienated youths on a lethal rampage—was shown at the New York Film Festival, coaxing him into a discussion of his work was about as easy as getting Garbo to gab about her next movie.

I guess you can do very well if you're you're doing.'

Later this month she will star in Jonathan Demme's action-comedy at kookier folks tinkering around with cal devices that enable them to eventually strike up instant, intimate with total strangers. 'When people see my hand radio, their personalities they're hidden behind a microphone said. 'I play a gym teacher by day night. Nighttime is when I make obs to my students.'

Film: 'Rising Target'

By RICHARD EDER. DOCUMENTARY. Such as Barbara Frank's film about the killing of Robert F. Kennedy, has a peculiar power to reverse the order of time. It should be used with delicacy or the emotional effects it produces will be fraudulent.

Making a virtue out of necessity, it is an outsider's view of the few days before, during and after the assassination. The camera shows the campaign train in California, Senator Kennedy's flight to Los Angeles, the partylike atmosphere at the hotel as news of his primary victory came in, the confusion when the shots were fired out of everyone's sight, the vigil at the hospital, and finally the airplane flying out of Los Angeles with the body and the mourners.

Otherwise, Miss Frank makes good use of her outsider's camera. If her machine is often blocked by the bigger machines of the television crews, if she has to crane and squint and stand on tiptoe, this only makes it a more accurate representation of what most participants actually see.

A scene from Barbara Frank's film "Rising Target"

A Look Backward

RISING TARGET, a documentary film about the assassination of Robert F. Kennedy, directed and produced by Barbara Frank, stars James Jackson, Robert Ehrig, Eli Hollander, John Churchill and Eric Sevareid.

There is the heaviness with which everyone moves after the tragedy has sunk in. Frank Mankiewicz, the press secretary, talks about the details of bullet fragments and bone splinters. Pierre Salinger gives the order of departure of the coffin and mourners. We take in the paradox; public life compels these two intimates of the dead man to speak in public, not about grief, but about timetables.

tainly because it is the most enigmatic, devious, contrary yet ultimately triumphant assertion of self that an extremely self-assertive woman arrived at in a busy, insistent lifetime.

A Ravishing Wallflower

And, looking at the sequence today, we don't believe a frame of it. The girl—no matter what else we may know about her—is so breathtakingly beautiful that the only conceivable next step is for a stag line to form instantly on her left, every male in the room fighting for position up front, and for her to dance, dance, dance all night.

Curiously, at the time "Alice Adams" was released (1935), this preposterous inversion of all common sense seems to have bothered no one. This newspaper's reviewer found the film at its most poignant during the sequence, speaking of Miss Hepburn as "an unwanted interloper whose pitiful finery is in sad contrast to the resplendent gowns of the other girls."

Katharine Hepburn in Mark 1936 film "A Woman Rebel"

Guide to the Best French Pastries

pastry lovers every weekend. No matter how resolutely stick to the noncaloric and narrow on weekdays, from rough Sunday thoughts, many to whipped-cream and custard, to crisp-crust and chocolate-glazed petits bûchettes, croissants and brioches, coffee cakes fragrant with nutmeg, are therefore understandable that it is their most copious temptations on peak Fridays, making them the perfect or some gloriously fattening shopping. Interested in exactly what the city has to offer, French patisserie, I weekend finding out.

classical French pastry was ve and, there are only four contenders in Manhattan: 316 Third Avenue (near 75th Street) and at 1330 Lexington Avenue (near 86th Street); and at 116 East Colette at 1136 Third Avenue (near 66th Street); and Elysee at Avenue (near 51st Street) and Second Avenue (near 72d on, I included two bakeries especially for French pastry, something of a reputation and Bloomingdale's whose is made for the most part and the Jon Vie Pastry Shop since of the Americas (near) and Immaculate Style proved to be the overall arty because of the variety, because of its carefully rounded immaculate style. But d Colette also had some y specialties worth remembering, since not one of or so choices sampled from tion had any distinction the more spectacular treat is the Succulent, a high golden triangular cake of alternating layers of crisp golden genoise cake and nter butter cream sharpened vor of bitter Seville orange for a cake that feeds 8 or delicious, and more basically to those who prefer their rich was the Gâteau Breton, ble layers of buttery, pâte latching in a thin filling of s, a wonderful choice when sprinkled with vanilla con- sugar. cream puffs, napoleons and und mocha eclairs were to t this shop, as were jewel- stry barquettes filled with a chiffonlike custard cream, topped by perfect fresh raspberries or strawberries. Eggshell thin cups of dark, bitter-sweet chocolate heaped with fluted puffs of rich and airy lemon or chocolate mousse were unusual and palate-boggling desserts, as were the flaky pastry tartlets of plums, peaches, or tiny sour cherries nestled in rum-spiked crème pâtissière. Bonté's cookies ($5.50 a pound) were miracles of crispness, most especially the crackling, leafy palmiers and the wafer thin nut, sugar and butter tuitles; and the delicate almond macarons.

Dumas excelled in two lavish cakes, each a masterpiece in its own way. The lighter and lovelier was the Fraisia ($7.95), a strawberry pink iced dome of light genoise sponge cake filled with fresh strawberries and cloudlets of whipped cream—a strawberry short-cake that made good, and how.

Le Pouf, a slim, petite arrangement of moist dark chocolate cake interwoven with a rich cocoa butter cream filling, all encased in bitter chocolate icing needed just a frill of whipped cream to attain perfection. Routade, a cake roll filled with coffee and toasted almond butter cream ($4.15 a pound) was well worth the insect it added to my waistline. And the Danish here—the pecan-studded coffee ring, the puffy cheese-filled pillows and the raisin-enriched schnecken (58 cents each) served with cups of frothy café au lait, would guarantee anyone a bracing start for the day, as would the toasted, almond-encrusted brioche slices.

While palmiers, tuitles and macarons here were not quite up to those at Bonté, Dumas's cookie assortment ($3.75 a pound) is the larger and most are excellent, most especially the noisettes de chocolat, crisp chocolate meringue-like mounds, crunchy with toasted hazelnuts.

While the selection at the charming little Colette French pastry shop is more limited, it is also less commercial and more homelike. In addition to the sweet offerings, Colette makes one of the city's outstanding quiches ($7.75), a tender pâte brisée crust crowned with a puffy, golden custard well-flecked with mildly smoked ham. Jalousie strips of puff pastry wrapped around minced ham and gruyere cheese that melts when the strip is heated, makes a wonderful hot hot d'oeuvre when sliced ($2.50), or served whole with a glass of chilled white wine, becomes a soul-satisfying lunch or midnight snack. Marvels of Rich Custard

Much like her quiches, Colette's fruit tarts (starting at $2.25)—especially the plum—are marvels of rich custard, crisp crust and piquant fruit. Each is a subtle combination of tastes behind tastes—butter, fruit, eggs, vanilla, cream, and sugar—that distinguishes truly fine pastry from the merely sweet.

The Trianon ($4.50) is Colette's triangular fudgy chocolate cake, more like a confection, in fact, and her little coiled rounds of butter-rich Danish, studded with pale green raisins, are among the best in town. Again for the lover of light and dry cakes that are only gently sweet, the almond enriched pain de genes ($4) would be a perfect choice. And for tea, try some of the delicate square wafer sandwiches merveilleuses (40 cents each) with lemon or chocolate butter cream fillings.

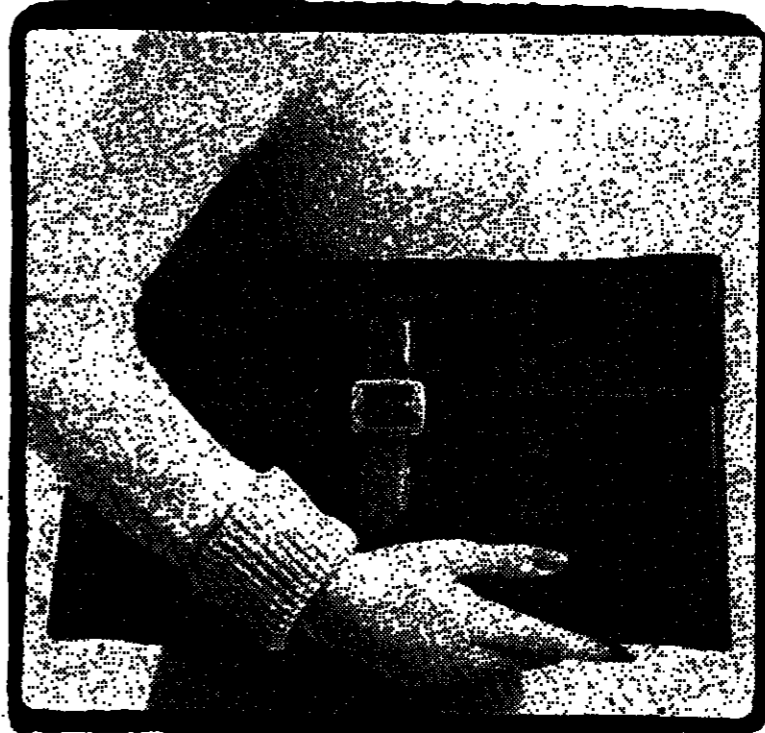

Six varieties of croissants and brioches were compared side by side last Sunday around our family breakfast table. Those from Bloomingdale's seemed devoid of butter and delicacy, while the Elysee entries were downright nasty and oily in flavor. Jon Vie's the most expensive of the lot at 60 cents each (as against 45 cents at Bonté and 50 cents at Dumas) looked perfect but again had no flavor whatever. Colette's brioches were more like popovers in shape, good, eggy golden puffs that would be acceptable if brioches were not what you had in mind, and her croissants while flaky and pleasant, were too large and just a little soggy. Bonté's brioches far out-distanced Dumas's, making them the winners, but as for the croissants, each had its distinctions.

Bonté's were more petite, more buttery and flakier, but Dumas's had an added good measure of salt, something I like in croissants. Still, this has to be one of life's more delightful dilemmas and one of the more pleasant we have to resolve. MIMI SHERATON

She was an ideal choice because she combines much the same bubbling, rhythmic surface and deep, inner warmth that Mr. Mercer expressed in his lyrics. With Michael Moore backing them on bass, Miss King and Miss McPartland were a mutually responsive team, Miss King using imaginative provocative phrasing over the percussive accompaniment of Miss McPartland, while Miss McPartland's solos between Miss King's vocal choruses were particularly clean, spare and strong. The evening revealed a virtually unknown Mercer gem—his lyrics to "Twilight World," a lovely haunting melody composed by Miss McPartland, sung brilliantly by Miss King. This is a team that deserves more than a one-night stand.

At Holy Trinity, A Mighty New Voice

By ALLEN HUGHES

A mighty voice will be added this season to the popular Sunday Bach cantata series at Holy Trinity Lutheran Church, Central Park West at 65th Street.

The organ was built by Robert M. Turner, of Hopewell, N.J., who designed it with Mr. Grimes, and it has been installed in an ornate wooden case in the church's rear gallery.

The instrument's tonal design was planned with Bach very much in mind, but it is by no means limited to Bach.

Decline to Reveal Price Although Mr. Grimes and Mr. Turner declined to reveal the price of the organ, a new instrument of comparable size might be expected to cost between $150,000 and $200,000 at today's prices.

An honest attempt has been made to provide an instrument that will play everything in the repertory.

Mr. Turner is especially known for the quality of French-sounding reed stops on his instruments, and there is an array of trumpets and clarions ready to blaze away with fine Gallic brilliance when desired. "It's one of the biggest organs I've built," Mr. Turner said, "and, of course, the latest is always the best. I think the principal choruses are the best I've ever done."

The "principal" stops of an organ (combinations of which are referred to as "principal choruses") are those that produce the fundamental, or most typical, organ tone and are particularly important in the performance of Bach's music.

The "principal choruses" will have an ideal opportunity to prove their worth when the 1976-77 season of "Evenings With Johann S." gets under way. It will begin Oct. 31 with Cantata 80, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" ("A Mighty Fortress Is Our God").

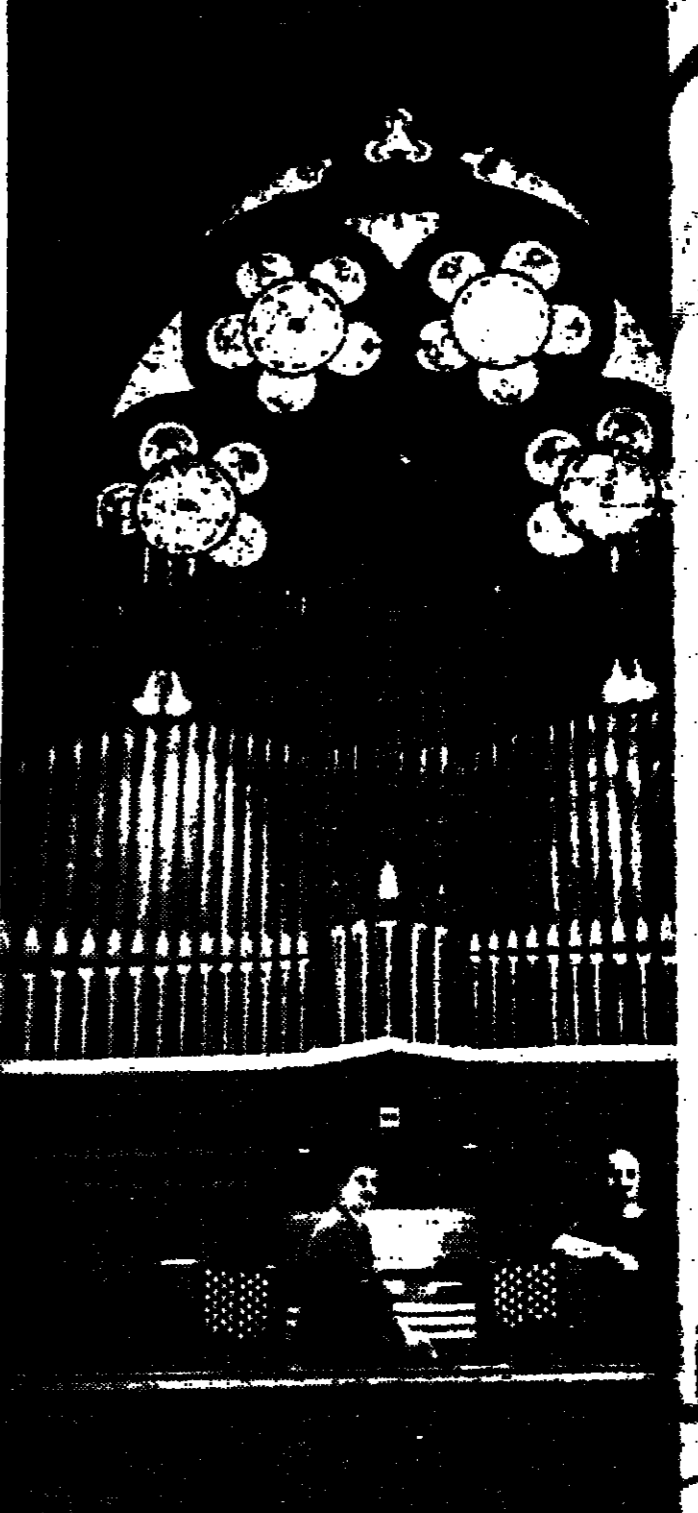

The Organ's Accompanists The cantatas are performed with a choir of 25, four vocal soloists (Diane Higginbotham, Jacqueline Pierce, Jon Garrison and Daniel Pratt), a chamber orchestra and, of course, the organ.

In past years, attendance has averaged 500 for each of the 20 or so cantatas given from October to Easter, and crowds of some 750 have overflowed onto the church steps for performances of such favorites as Cantata 140, "Wachet auf," and the "Magnificat." Solo organ works of Bach are also played in conjunction with the cantata presentations.

Mr. Grimes's inaugural program Sunday will be followed by a series of five "Benefits for Bach" guest recitals, Sunday afternoons at 5, to aid the "Evenings With Johann S." Donations of $3 each will be requested. The recitals will be by Richard Beckett (Sept. 26), Robin Smith (Oct. 3), Nancianne Barrella (Oct. 10), Paul-Martin Maki (Oct. 17) and G. Dene Barnard (Oct. 24).

Their programs have been planned to demonstrate the quality and versatility of the new organ, with works by composers ranging from Sweelinck (1562-1621) to 20th-century figures, such as Gnaessler and Guillon.

Mr. Grimes is starting things off Sunday with Liszt's mighty Prelude and Fugue on B-A-C-H. It's a razzle-dazzle Romantic fantasy that celebrates the name of Bach unambiguously. The program will also include music of Franck and Gnaessler—and, yes, Bach: the Toccata and Fugue in D minor (BWV 565).

Weekend Gardening

Poinsettia: "a short-day plant"

Put your old poinsettia in the closet this weekend, and you'll have flowers by Thanksgiving. Poinsettias are short-day plants. That is, the natural signal that initiates the hormonal changes

The ideal poinsettia closet is one whose temperature is in the high 60's. If it gets colder than 60 degrees, most of the leaves will probably drop off

Make sure the closet is really dark, though. If light streams in under a crack beneath the door, your daily moving routine will probably come to naught rather than flowers. The new breeds of poinsettias are some of the most light-sensitive photoperiodic plants known.

The best way to check the darkroom qualities of your closet is to step inside and close the door while all the lights are ablaze in the room beyond.

While you're in the closet you might reflect on Joel Roberts Poinsett, the first United States minister to Mexico in the early 1800's. He was somewhat of a character, having been previously recalled from several posts in South America for supporting local revolutionaries.

A few years later, however, it was deemed to be not a new genus, but rather a member of the well-known Euphorbia. Nevertheless, befitting Poinsett's pro-proletariat proselytizing, it is thought of as poinsettia, not Euphorbia pulcherrima.

make much better houseplants than their prototypes. Those developed in the last decade not only produce fuller and more compact specimens, but they also produce more and longer lasting flowers, need less daylight, and are generally hardier and more disease resistant.

Still, the only way to induce flowering of a poinsettia is to go through the dark-closet routine. That is why so many people decide to start with new plants every year. If you are thinking of getting or giving a poinsettia this year, keep the following in mind.

When you are transporting the plants, do not expose them to temperatures below 50 degrees, for chilling will cause leaf drop. When the new plants are first brought home, water them immediately, well enough so that the excess drains out the bottom of the pot (hopefully into a saucer). Also fertilize well.

Professor Kirkham knew that cops were hostile, insecure, authoritarian and unstable.

Then he put on a badge.

Professor of criminology George Kirkham believed that a well-educated, sensible man like himself would bring a humane and rational approach to law enforcement. He was wrong.

Challenged by a policeman in his class, Professor Kirkham temporarily left academia to become a full-time street cop on the roughest beat in a large American city. Beat Ninety Five, the "War Zone", shattered his theories and transformed his life. West will win, and has a choice of defenses. If he plays another club, South ruffs high, draws trumps, and has 12 tricks. West can return a trump, which would be the killing move if South had carelessly ruffed low at the first trick. But as it is, his entries are in good order. He can win in dummy, ruff a club, and return to dummy with a diamond lead to draw trumps.

Lisa Marsden has come uninvited to her mother's ancestral home in Scottish Highlands, the scene long ago of a nightmarish tragedy which her father was brutally killed. The reception she receives is far welcoming. But it is not until an attempt on her own life almost succeeds that Lisa realizes there is a murderous evil still stalking the corridors of Deveron Hall.

By ANATOLE HROYARD

INTRO ART. By Kenneth Clark. Illustrated. Harper and Row.

LANDSCAPE INTO ART, the 14th-century man climbed a mountain in order to get the best view. He was in a sense the first landscape painter. In his time the idea of looking at nature as a source of pleasure was a revolutionary notion. The idea of the landscape as a kind of art was born. The landscape painter was no longer a craftsman, a man who would draw trees that they would, a man whose trees and the rest of the landscape were represented by a pattern of lines, as when they looked at the sky, when they looked at the stars, by hierarchies of lines, by the pattern of a pattern of lines.

The idea of the landscape as a source of pleasure was a revolutionary notion. The idea of the landscape as a kind of art was born. The landscape painter was no longer a craftsman, a man who would draw trees that they would, a man whose trees and the rest of the landscape were represented by a pattern of lines, as when they looked at the sky, when they looked at the stars, by hierarchies of lines, by the pattern of a pattern of lines.

According to Lord Clark, the landscape painter was no longer a craftsman, a man who would draw trees that they would, a man whose trees and the rest of the landscape were represented by a pattern of lines, as when they looked at the sky, when they looked at the stars, by hierarchies of lines, by the pattern of a pattern of lines.

In the early 16th century, we find another pioneering breakthrough: the first landscape, by Piero di Cosimo, in which man is of no importance. Nature has come into its own. Soon we find, says Lord Clark, that men are painting nature as mysterious and unsalable, even in revolt against man. Once it has been recognized, there is no denying the imposing force, which is so much more visible and palpable than God's will.

The ideal landscape is one that is brought under the most benign sort of control. Lord Clark called this stage of landscape painting "the most enchanting dream which has ever consoled mankind, the myth of a Golden Age in which man lived on the fruits of the earth, peacefully, piously and with primitive simplicity."

It is not until the 19th century, with the advent of Impressionism, that nature is defined in its own right. At a time when other faiths were weakening, landscape painting filled the void. Impressionism is seen, in "Landscape into Art," as "the perfect expression of democratic humanism... of a complete confidence in nature and in human nature." And this, in Lord Clark's opinion, is its weakness. "Art," he writes, "is concerned with our whole being — our knowledge, our memories, our associations. To confine painting to purely visual sensations is to touch only the surface of our spirits." Impressionism, he continues, lacks the element of magic. "That is the price we must pay for the happiness of the here and now on which it is founded."

Expressionism, which follows, is essentially a tragic art, according to the author. For all his love of nature, van Gogh could not help distorting it with his anguish.

And now, says Lord Clark, we can no longer console ourselves by escaping into a closed garden, or any other fenced-in world. Nature is neither friendly nor harmonious, as lacking both unity and continuity. All our pastoral confidence was based on the misreading of natural caprice. There was a thorn in the flower that we sniffed.

"Landscape into Art" was first published in 1949. This is a revised, expanded edition with more pictures. Until the last page, one keeps hoping that the author will revise that harsh verdict too that he will not slum the garden gate in our faces. For all his brilliant arguments, there does seem to be a case to be made to the contrary. Some of us are still listening to the landscape, even as our blood beats in our ears.

"America, Vance Bourjaily has found you!"

Vance Bourjaily's post World War II novels, The End of My Life, The Violated, and Confessions of a Spent Youth, earned him Ernest Hemingway's acclamation as "the most talented writer under 50." Now Vance Bourjaily has delivered on the promissory note of his early career with a Canterbury Tales for our times, a bawdy, joyous, hugely entertaining novel that is being welcomed by readers and reviewers as the year's most important literary event—and more.

"It's of its time, as John Dos Passos's 'U.S.A.' was... a gigantic human envelope holding sections of our immediate, beautiful and brutal world..."

"This is the novel Vance Bourjaily's career has promised us. It hears America hurting and crying. It also hears America singing, feels it changing, sees its swinging and going on and on through fields of Iowa corn, down the Buck Rogers freeways, up over our concrete pueblos spearing the sky. NOW PLAYING AT CANTERBURY is Vance Bourjaily at 54 and discovering Breughel populating America.

"Bourjaily believes life is good. Perhaps so much literary fiction is depressive because it's written by young consciences yet to be tried. You have to pass 40 to know what not to hope for. Bourjaily celebrates life, incants it right from the start...

"He shows us how Americans do their work, play with one another, think about art, satisfy lust, fight authority, suffer abominations and otherwise carry on their lives in the years of nihilism and atrocity, the early 1960's to the mid-1970's.

"His novel works. It's literature in the service of life... It will be read and remembered."

—Webster Schott, New York Times Book Review

"This is Vance Bourjaily's masterpiece... A work that will be remembered long after the year's ephemera have been forgotten... Like the teller of tales he has elected to be, Bourjaily regales us with a cornucopia of experiences from the academic to the erotic, in a variety of voices from the crude to the sophisticated... a word picture of American life—its manners, changing mores, and the millions of voices with which it speaks... This is a virtuoso novel."

—John Barkham Reviews

"Bourjaily's virtues have never been on better display. He can capture American speech and cage it on the page without loss of vitality. His sympathies are generous; his descriptions of the nation's heartland throbb with passion."

—Paul Grey, Time Magazine

"It's too good not to be believed... a great big jack-in-the-box of a book, as hip, kinky, and right now as you could ask for."

—Joe David Bellamy, Chicago Daily News

"A masterpiece. Bravo! There's comedy, there's politics... there's sex from every angle you can think of, there's adventure... He takes on all of 20th century America—but he brings it off."

—Jane Howard, Mademoiselle

Confiance of 2 Worlds

JOHN LEONARD

WARRIOR. Memoirs of a Ghost. By Maxine Kingston. 209 pages. Alfred A. Knopf.

When you hear on the radio that the big guns of autumn are howling, you know it's Cheever and Mailer, the two men making loud noises every month. But Maxine Kingston's remarkable book has been heard; it is one of the best.

"Warrior" is itself any book. It is fierce intelligence, glowing among the emotional portraits of village life in a world that is about as sentimental as an account of small and Chinese-American life in a laundry of Manhattan. It burns the mind. As a dream-avenger, it is dizzying, a poem turned into a sword. Maxine Kingston, who was born in Honolulu, there are two sides to her. One side is Chinese, the other is American. She is a bridge between the two worlds, like the poet who is a bridge between the two worlds. And it isn't there is a place for her with her songs "from the or Woman" trafficks back between sets of ghosts.

re-imagining the past with such dark beauty, such precision and anger and sadness, that you feel you have saddled the tiger and see all through the fiery eye of God. Then, suddenly, you are dumped into the mundane, into scenes so carefully observed, so balanced on a knife-edge of hope and humiliation, that you don't know whether to laugh or cry. Other writers come to mind — Garcia Marquez, who also knows how to dress myth up in living flesh; or, thinking about warrior women, Monique Wittig, if she had a sense of humor and before she lapsed into badinage.

But this shuffling on an electric line of prose, between fantasy and specificity, is wonderfully original. I can't remember when a young writer walked up to and into every important scene in a book and dealt with it outright, as Mrs. Kingston does, without any evasions whatsoever. Of an old writer, for that matter: they have their avoidance tricks; it wastes a writer always having to be in the best form, compromising the least with difficult material, unruly characters. It doesn't weary Mrs. Kingston. And Brave Orchid, the mother to end all mothers in this book, is more real to me than most of the people I see every day.

Who is Maxine Hong Kingston? Nobody at Knopf seems to know. They have never laid eyes on her. She lives in Honolulu, nicely situated between Occident and Orient, with a husband and small son. She teaches English and creative writing. There is no one more qualified to teach English and creative writing.

The Private Life of Mona Lisa

A novel by Pierre La Mure

author of Moulin Rouge

Historic fiction as it should be but seldom is... a rich re-creation of 15th century Italy. —Barbara A. Bannon, Publisher, World

At last, the secrets of the enigmatic Madonna Lisa del Giocondo are revealed. "Pierre La Mure," Saturday Review once observed, "has the faculty of making history seem not only exciting but contemporary." In his latest novel, the stories of Florence echo to the feet of the Medici. Italians alternately laugh and tremble at the mere invasion of France's Charles VIII, the machinations of Savonarola and Cesare Borgia shape the politics of the beautiful city on the Arno, and Leonardo da Vinci immortalizes the enigmatic smile that has intrigued art lovers for centuries. The famed beauty and her treacherous love come alive in a novel filled with pageantry and passion. "It glows like a Renaissance jewel." —Rosemary Hawley Jarman

Music: Sy Oliver's Dance Band

By JOHN S. WILSON

When Sy Oliver's orchestra opened at the Rainbow Room a year and a half ago Mr. Oliver was stressing the crisp, precise and rhythmic arranging style that was associated with him when he established a sound for the Jimmie Lunceford band in the 1930's and a somewhat similar sound for Tommy Dorsey's orchestra in the 40's. But now, as he starts his fourth extended engagement in the room on the 65th floor of the RCA Building, Mr. Oliver has extended that basic style to create a contemporary equivalent of the smooth, melodic approach used in the heyday of dance bands in the years before swing took over. It is a relaxed, sinuous sound, focused on Mr. Oliver's two saxophonists, Jimmy Powell and Heywood Henry, complemented from time to time by Buddy Smith, a singer who evokes memories of early Dick Powell.

Whatever this seven-piece group plays, from cha cha to hustle, it is done with a light, easy touch and with ensembles that are surprisingly full and varied for so small a band. In stretching its repertory to include the hustle and some token representation of recent pop hits, the band does not always maintain a distinctive style and sound. But when it is slowly mulling "Begin the Beguine," swinging on Duke Ellington's "C Jam Blues" or when Mr. Oliver, Mr. Smith and Candy Ross join in singing "Don't Blame Me" with the clipped backbeat that is Mr. Oliver's hallmark, this band produces dance music with color and finesse that are rarely lavished nowadays on this ephemeral art.

TV WEEKEND

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

Friday

"Spencer's Pilots" which can be sampled on CBS-TV at 8 this evening, might be considered the opening salvo in commercial television's new season. It might, except that CBS has already shown an episode of "Delvecchio," a series that will be carried regularly on Sunday nights. It might, except that the new season isn't officially admitted to be open until this Sunday, and meanwhile the debut schedule is being jumbled by the Presidential debates and nervous networking strategies for counter-programming.

So this edition of "Spencer's Pilots" is being billed as a "preview." By this and any other name, it is a dud. Spencer Parish (Gene Evans) is a World War II flying ace who now operates a charter flight service. His main pilots are young Cass and Stan (Christopher Stone and Todd Susman). They josh each other a lot about flying and sexy girl students.

Tonight they have to pilot a sabotaged air ambulance, which is carrying a doctor and a near-dead victim of a determined thief. The ambulance is forced to crash land. Slapping his forehead in disbelief, Stan asks, "Did our patient make it, Doc?" The doc replies, "Yeah, but I don't know how." Neither do we.

As a candidate for the 8 to 9 "family hour," this new series is obviously not designed to be especially profound or provocative. But even the watching-together family may demand something more than elaborate aerial shots and simulations. The damaged plane does, of course, get off the ground again, but the doctor is forced to observe, "My kids are never going to believe this." Perhaps the CBS programming department should hire the good doctor as a consultant.

At 9, on NBC, Neil Sedaka is introduced by his son Mark as "the greatest singer and composer in the whole wide world." Near the end of the hour, he is joined by his daughter Dara in singing "Laughter in the Rain." In between these all-in-the-family displays, the star is joined by Bette Midler (who is somewhat more hysterical than usual, if that is conceivable) and David Bremer (star of a new NBC series called "Snip," which has already been postponed for a while).

Mr. Sedaka may not be the greatest, but he is indisputably talented in a pleasant middle-of-the-road way. With pudgy friendliness, he uses a calm openness to communicate stability and sincerity. He is, it would appear, a nice guy, and he provides a nice show.

Saturday

At 6 P.M., WCBS-TV is presenting one of those do-good projects that leave many observers feeling nervous. The program is called "What Do You Want to Be When You Grow Old?" Narrated by Loren Green, and distributed by Y. and R. Ventures (Young & Rubicam) the half-hour studies the problems of aging. The approach is positive and the material — including several fine portraits of elderly persons leading normally active lives — is handled with sensitivity by William Peters, the director, writer and producer.

The problem is that this effort, which deals with solutions that "include new medical approaches to both the physical and mental conditions associated with aging" is sponsored solely by the Roerig division of Pfizer Pharmaceuticals. Roerig produces a psychosis-treatment drug called Navane. No matter how noble the intentions, the connection of a pharmaceuticals company with a "public service" project that, however indirectly, could ultimately have an enormous impact on the company's own profits raises unsettling questions. Institutional advertising has — or should have — its limits.

The rest of Saturday evening is heavy with live presentations. At 10 P.M., CBS will carry from the Hollywood Palladium, the second annual "Rock Music Awards." The winners in 15 categories (from hard rock to you name it) will be selected by a "national panel" of critics, writers (presumably, as opposed to critics) and disk jockeys. The hosts are Diana Ross and Alice Cooper.

At 11:30, NBC's successful "Saturday Night" returns for a second season, offering 90 live minutes from Rockefeller Center. The Not Ready For Prime Time Players will be joined by James Taylor, the singer, as guest. But this above all the host is Lily Tomlin, an uncommonly talented performer. "Saturday Night" will be followed at 1 A.M. by "Rock Concert," in which Don Kishner, the producer, will feature Elton John, Rod Stewart and Maxine Nightingale.

Sunday

"60 Minutes" returns at 7 P.M. to CBS prime time, in which it gathered impressive ratings last season. Once again, with spiffy, feisty Don Hewitt as executive producer, the reporters are Mike Wallace, Morley Safer and Dan Rather. The layout for this edition appears to be fairly standard: a report on a "humanized" factory in Indiana; a profile of a maverick union leader.

Also at 7, on ABC's Channel 7, the new Bill Cosby show is scheduled to make its debut, but ABC officials were insisting that the finished program would not reach New York until Sunday morning, clearly (or perhaps safely) out of the reach of pre-reviewing. It should also not be forgotten that many old series are returning with new episodes. At 8, for example, ABC's "Six Million Dollar Man" is confronted with his bionic arch-rival Bigfoot, who is being used by space aliens in a plot to rip off the earth. Tune in next week to find out if our hero will be allowed to live for another full season.

Over on the "independent" stations, at 9 P.M. WNEW, Channel 5, is reaching Episode Two of "Fall of Eagles," a BBC and Time-Life series that traces the royal and complicated shenanigans of the Hapsburgs, Hohenzollerns and Romanovs from 1848 to 1918. Tonight's "The Fall of the Iron Chancellor" completes the story of Prussia's Bismarck that began in the first episode. And therein lies the problem with WNEW's presentation of this fine series. For some doubtlessly incredible reason, the station has chosen to show the program on a monthly basis. With the intricacies of plots and family lines, it is difficult to remember from a get month to month. Bismarck is splendid. Another BBC and "The Onedin Line," a weekly display on In this instance, though scheduled for 11 P.M. suspects, for an almost appreciate tale adventures beginning England, of 1860.

BOND PRICES REACH YEAR'S TOP LEVELS

Big Drop in Money Supply Brings Gains—Interest on Corporate and Municipal Issues Falls

Surprised and delighted by the big drop in the nation's basic money supply that was disclosed at 4 P.M., traders raised bond prices to their highest levels of the year late yesterday. As a result, interest rates on municipal bonds dropped to their lowest levels since early 1975, and interest rates on corporate bonds fell to their lowest levels since early 1974.

New Bond Issues

Table with columns: Issue, Maturity, Yield, Price, and other financial metrics.

Yielded late Wednesday at 101.20/32, climbed to 102 by mid-afternoon shortly before the Federal Reserve released its weekly data on the money supply.

By 4:30 P.M., the 8's had moved up to 102 1/2, a gain of almost one point for the day—a substantial bond market move. As a result, the yield on the bonds was reduced to 7.77 percent from the 8 percent return they provide investors when they were sold on Aug. 6.

Market Termed 'Euphoric' The bond market was absolutely euphoric today as corporate bond traders remarked at the end of the afternoon.

With the narrowly defined money supply—most checking account balances plus currency in the hands of the public—down to $304.1 billion in the week ended Sept. 8 from $305.8 billion the week before, the credit markets reasoned that the Federal Reserve would not move to slow down the rate of expansion of the "monetary aggregates."

Market Place Posner Expansion: A Family Matter?

Victor Posner's well publicized efforts to expand his empire are taking on the characteristics of a family matter. It was learned yesterday that Carolyn Woodruff, an institutional sales person for the Colin, Hochstin Company, a small institutional broker at 120 Broad way, spends a substantial part of her time developing business in Florida and considers the Miami Beach-based Mr. Posner among her clients.

In recent months, the Sharon Steel Corporation, which is controlled by Mr. Posner, has accumulated 9.9 percent of Foremost-McKesson Inc., a San Francisco-based food and drug company. Mr. Posner has been preparing to acquire 30 percent of Foremost through a debenture offering, a plan that also included delayed pending a Securities and Exchange Commission investigation into the accuracy and adequacy of certain papers filed with the commission concerning Sharon, the NVF Company and the Birdsboro Corporation, all Posner-controlled concerns.

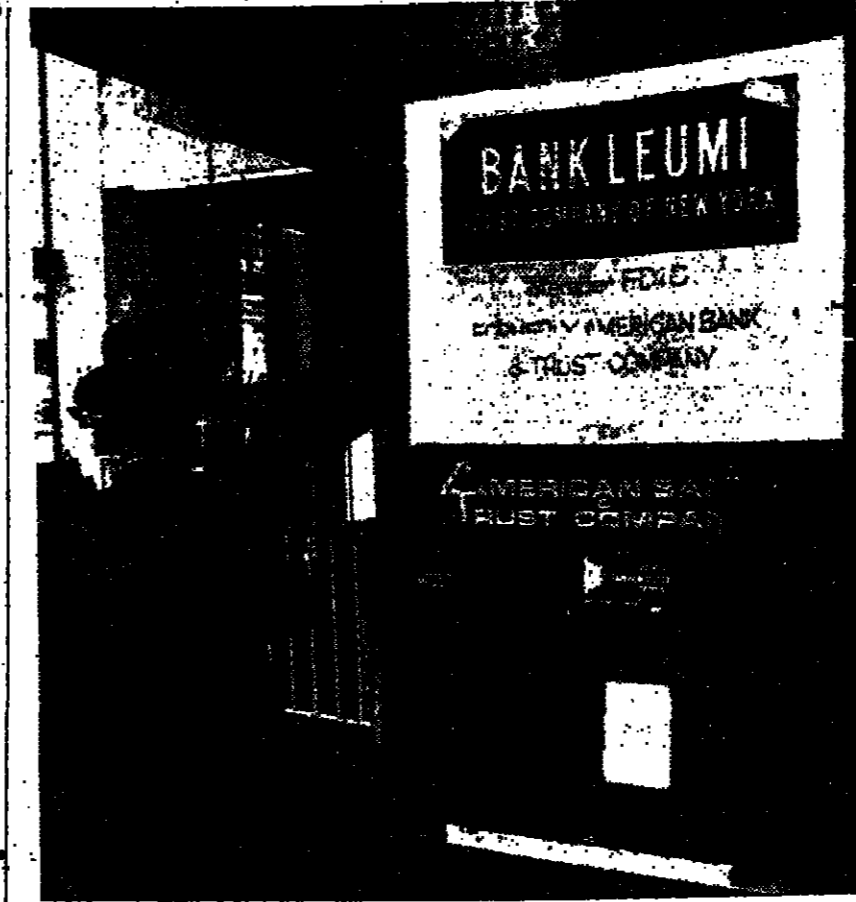

Stocks Gain, With Dow Up by 8.64, On Expectation of Prime Rate Cut

Continued from Page D1 The money market also benefited from the injection of reserves into the banking system yesterday for seasonal needs. The central bank had purchased Treasury notes and bonds on Wednesday, and yesterday it negotiated seven-day repurchase agreements with dealers, an action that pumps money into the banks temporarily.

Financing activity in the fixed-income sphere of the money and capital markets, meanwhile, remained heavy yesterday. In Washington, the Treasury announced plans to sell $2.5 billion of five-year notes on Sept. 28. The notes, which will be sold in minimum denominations of $1,000, are being offered entirely for additional cash to finance the Federal Government's deficit between income and spending. No refunding is involved in the financing.

In the tax-exempt bond market, the Bond Buyer index declined to 6.50 percent yesterday from 6.52 percent a week ago. As a result, this index of local government bond interest rates has dropped 53 basis points since Memorial Day and stands at its lowest point since early March 1975.

Extradition of Bordonni Is Asked By United States in Venezuela CARACAS, Venezuela, Sept. 16 (UPI)—The United States Justice Department has asked Venezuela to extradite Carlo Bordonni, one of eight men indicted by a Federal grand jury in New York City last month for their participation in the Franklin National Bank failure, according to United States Embassy sources.

Credit Demand and Rates Fall Short of Summer Predictions

Men in Libya Learn To Live With Qaddafi

By MARVINE HOWE

Special to The New York Times

LI, Sept. 16—After 2 1/2 years of crises, American and foreign companies operating here seem to have reached a mutually satisfactory truce with Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi's revolutionary regime.

Production is up substantially, in line with those of other oil-producing nations where formerly the price was higher, and the drive for nationalization has abated for now, the Government and the investors have become more pragmatic, an American executive said.

It is not that bad, and they are taking risks. It is in a political squeeze. The concern of American oil companies is that the companies might be in a political squeeze should the East troubles erupt.

All companies fear any action by Libya by Israel. Others are about the continuing Libyan fight with President Anwar el-Sadat, who is considered "an American" by Libya.

Relations between the oil companies and the Government appear generally to be adjusting themselves to the new situation. Government estimates that its income this year will be between $2 and $3 billion for a population of 2.5 million.

Percent From Companies: moves toward greater Government control and participation, 85 percent of oil production still comes from United States companies: Exxon, Mobil, Continental, Amerasia Hess and Grace Petroleum.

Also operating here are AGIP, the operating company controlled by the Italian Ente Nazionale Idrocarburi, ELF (Essoes of Lubrifiants de France), Agip and Hispanoil as well as the state-owned Libyan National Oil Company.

Libya's oil output in July was 1.97 million barrels a day for an average of 1.8 billion barrels for the seven-month period, or 48.7 percent over last year.

The United States is the largest single buyer of Libya's high-grade, low-sulfur content crude, while West Germany and Italy are also good customers. The French have been told they must buy more Libyan crude if they want to increase sales on the lucrative market here.

More Than 4 Billion Set: The Government has budgeted more than $4 billion of its oil revenue for development spending—which means essentially imported equipment and technical know-how.

The general feeling in the oil industry is that the Government with its ambitious development program will continue to consider foreign expertise necessary, although the present status of the companies could be changed.

There is some talk here that the Government may nationalize the oil concessions and make service contracts with the existing companies, as was done in Venezuela.

They'd be prepared to go right along if they wanted 100 percent ownership, a Texas executive said the other day.

The oil industry hasn't always felt like that in Libya. Life hasn't been easy since the revolution of Sept. 1, 1969, when 27-year-old Colonel Qaddafi and Burning flare gas in an oilfield in Libya. Foreign oil companies there seem to have come to an accommodation with the Government.

a group of young officers overthrew the monarchy.

It was Libya in fact that led off the price war with a unilateral price rise in 1970, and was one of the hard-liners of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries that pushed up prices worldwide after the October 1973 war in the Middle East.

The Libyans followed this with forced production cuts after the peak of 3.5 million barrels a day in 1970. In 1972, a Government decree ruled production should not exceed 2 million barrels a day.

In 1973, the national oil company took over several companies outright: British Petroleum, Nelson Bunker Hunt, Phillips, Shell and Amosca and assumed 51 percent participation in some companies and 85 percent in others.

Meanwhile there was a steady stream of day-to-day problems for the companies. Senior executives would be called from their home offices and then not received by Government officials. Orders would be given for the dismissal of some foreign workers and secretaries were refused work permits on the grounds of "Libyanization."

Overpriced at $16 a Barrel: Things got worse in 1974 because the Libyans had overpriced their oil at $16 a barrel. Sales fell and production dropped below the Government ceiling. The price was adjusted downward, but not enough and, by January 1975, production had fallen to 900,000 barrels a day.

"We were screaming like a pig under a gate," a long-time foreign oil man recalls.

The Libyans too were having money problems, and finally adjusted their price to a low $11.30 a barrel in July 1975 and production went up.

But there was new trouble for the companies. The Government declared a ceiling of 2.3 million barrels a day as a means of putting pressure on the companies to obtain a variety of demands.

The Occidental Petroleum Corporation had gotten its production up to 400,000 barrels a day in August 1975 and was told in September its allowable output had been cut to 200,000 barrels. There were also delays in Government recognition of a new discovery by Occidental.

Crippling Blow to Occidental: The company considered this a crippling blow. It decided to take the two problems to arbitration in courts in France and the Hague.

Occidental was in a strong position because it was said to hold outside the country $440 million in payments due to Libya. On the other hand the net book value of its assets was officially valued at only $100 million.

In their pragmatic fashion, the Libyans came to an agreement before the matter went to arbitration. Just as pragmatically, Occidental and other companies are now making new investments and working on new acreage. The foreign oil companies are putting a total of $100 million into exploration spending in addition to about $33 million from the Libyan National Oil Company.

Delay Is Foreseen on Nuclear Bills On Private Uranium Role and Arms

—probably would mean no Congressional action on the proposal until next year.

The stronger bill, introduced by Senator Percy but jointly drafted by him, Senator Abraham A. Ribicoff, Democrat of Connecticut, and Senator John H. Glenn Jr., Democrat of Ohio, would impose penalties on countries found to be violating United States safeguards designed to prevent the use of nuclear technology and material for the manufacture of atomic weapons.

The penalties—up to breaking off commerce and communications with violators—were to be imposed under a specific timetable that could be somewhat modified should the President feel more time was required.

The Administration-backed bill, on the other hand, provides for milder penalties and also outlines incentives for countries to continue cooperating with the United States in nuclear matters.

Senator Percy said in an interview today that unless Congress acted within the next few days, approval of the bill to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons was unlikely this year. Senate and House leaders now hope to adjourn Congress on Oct. 2.

"I am terrified about this problem," Senator Percy said. "We must do something about tightening international safeguards."

Speech by Ford Suggested: Both Senator Percy and Representative John B. Anderson, a respected Illinois Republican on the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, have recommended that President Ford make a major speech on the nuclear proliferation issue, possibly to the United Nations.

The issue of the possible spread of nuclear weapons to scores of nations has become a matter of increasing world concern. One measure of the concern was the appointment of a special Presidential task force headed by Robert W. Fri, the deputy administrator of the Energy

Research and Development Administration, to develop a report on nuclear options so that President Ford could make a comprehensive statement on United States goals and policies.

While the struggles within the Ford Administration and between the Administration and Congress are continuing on the issue of nuclear proliferation, the controversial plan to bring private industry into "enriching" natural uranium appears to have died—at least for this Congress.

Purged by White House: The plan had been actively pursued by the White House despite the initial opposition by many of its energy experts and a highly critical report by the General Accounting Office.

The plan, which was narrowly approved by the House of Representatives this summer, would have provided Government guarantees to private industry should a company build the enormously expensive facility required to enrich uranium.

A consortium established by the Bechtel Engineering Company and the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company had developed a plan to build a facility for about $3 billion in Alabama and played a lead role in what now appears to be an unsuccessful effort to persuade Congress to approve the plan, which the Ford Administration argued was necessary to assure energy independence for the United States.

Critics of the development of private enrichment facilities have argued that it would be far less costly simply to add on new equipment to the Government's existing enrichment facilities.

Canada Payments Deficit Down: OTAWA, Sept. 16 (Reuters)—Canada had a balance-of-payments deficit in the second quarter of 1976 of $1.26 billion, seasonally adjusted after a first-quarter deficit of $1.38 billion, Statistic Canada said. In the second quarter of 1975, there was a deficit of $1.28 billion and for all of 1975, the deficit was $4.97 billion, the agency said.

ments to divert oil to short markets without incurring steep price mark-ups.

United States sources said the governments had agreed that shortage prices should not be "discriminatory" or create "excess profits." What those words would mean in practice remains unresolved, officials said, as does the question of how to resolve disputes over pricing.

One view here is that Washington will find itself caught in the middle between oil-short importing countries that are protesting price rises and the American companies from which the importers are to buy oil. About half the participating companies are American.

To prevent disclosure of present market shares, which could have anticompetitive effects, the autumn test will be based on 1975 supply, inventory and demand data, officials said.

merchandising of Montgomery Ward. was also somewhat dubious about an upsurge in consumer expenditures. "We have noticed a mild increase in consumer spending which we expect to continue," he said, "but it's not a dramatic increase by any means—just mild—and it's impossible to tell if it is actually due to higher consumer spending or stronger inventory control by the major retailers."

Apparently some stores are benefiting from the fact that items are out of stock at other stores as retailers strive to keep their inventories lean.

The Sears chairman said he was satisfied with the recent price trend in retailing, noting that "in some lines our prices will be no higher this fall than a year ago, and it should be pointed out that the rate of price increases in all general merchandise is still less than 4 percent—the best of any sector of the economy." He compared it with an increase of 8 1/2 percent for services and the overall 5.4 percent rise in the consumer Price Index for July.

Like Mr. Wood, the chairman of the Genesco organization said he felt it was most important for retailing and for the economy that the nation keep inflation under firm control. Backing their concern, the latest Citibank letter observed: "Barring another acceleration of inflation, a firmer tone to retail sales is anticipated."

"The worst thing that could happen," Mr. Jarman said, "would be to see inflation heating up again. If it doesn't, I think 1977 will be a good year. All the fundamentals are there for good business. I think we're having an interruption now that's not all that bad for the economy. It will make the recovery more orderly and will help it to last longer."

On the current state of the economy, Mr. Wood commented: "I feel we have a sustainable rate of increase in the economy. If we can get a pickup in construction activity for both new plant and equipment and for housing, it will give the economy the stimulus to round out the recovery. I am relatively optimistic that we will see this."

Thus, at the moment, there is more hope than evidence in leading retail circles that the summer pause in their business and in the economy has passed. When the figures on retail sales are in for September, which had a later Labor Day this year, there may be more evidence to make the retailers as assured about a "re-acceleration" of business activity as the Ford Administration's chief economic adviser.

Economists Hear a Partisan Debate

In part this neglect, according to Mr. Volcker, is the result of the intellectual triumph of monetarism in the 1960's, a theory emphasizing the effect of changes in the money supply on the level of economic activity. In policy terms, the theory implies that to keep the economy growing at a steady, noninflationary pace, the central bank simply has to set a moderate, fixed rate of expansion in bank reserves, and not worry about short-term fluctuations in other targets such as interest rates.

Interest Rate on Mortgages Up In August to '76 High of 9.03%

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 (UPI)—The average interest rate for new home mortgages in August climbed past the 9 percent level for the first time in 1976, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board said today.

High interest costs have been one of the reasons that the housing industry is not recovering with other segments of the economy. One of every five construction workers is unemployed. The board said the effective rate of new home mortgages was 9.03 percent in August, up from 8.97 percent in July. It was the highest since the rate was 9.12 percent in February 1975.

GOLD CLOSES AT $114 AFTER I.M.F. AUCTION

as backing for their currencies. Falling gold prices, induced by the I.M.F. auctions, mean a loss of value in the gold reserves held in Europe.

Yesterday's price action was encouraging to gold speculators, but dealers reported that the upward-reflected short covering to some extent. This involved the purchase of gold by short-sellers who had anticipated a sharp price decline...

In order to avoid losses and to reap profits, short-sellers must buy to replace gold that they borrowed and sold. Their purchases can sometimes reflect temporary market conditions rather than any long-term change in the outlook.

Speculators who anticipate rising gold prices feel that the outlook for currency values is doubtful. They anticipate a rush to exchange currencies for gold, which would drive up the price. They also suggest that central banks will be forced to absorb much of the I.M.F. gold to defend the value of their gold reserves.

The I.M.F. reported yesterday that bids in Wednesday's sale ranged from a low of about $71 an ounce to a high of more than $114. The heaviest volume of bidding was clustered in the area between $108 and $109, where there were 40 bids totaling 905,600 ounces.

The 14 successful bidders were identified as the Deutsche Bank of Frankfurt, the Dresdner Bank in New York, the Exchange National Bank & Trust in New York, Johnson Matthey Bankers in London, the Molybdenum Metals Corporation in New York, Samuel Montague & Company in London, the Republic National Bank of New York, N. M. Rothschild & Sons in London, Sharns, Pixley in New York, and the Swiss Bank Corporation, the Bank Leu, Swiss Credit Bank and the Union Bank of Switzerland, all in Zurich.

The I.M.F. did not disclose how much gold each received, but N.M. Rothschild said in London that it acquired 39,200 ounces on behalf of clients at an average of $109.70 an ounce, for roughly $4.3 million.

In Hong Kong, dealers reported that they had been encouraged by the large volume of bidding for the I.M.F. gold. The I.M.F. said it had received bids for 3,862,000 ounces, although it was selling only 780,000 ounces, where much of the world's supply of gold is produced, Owen Horwood, the Finance minister, said the prices in auction should not have an adverse effect on the market. He said the volume of bidding indicated widespread interest, and he predicted rising prices following some short-term softness.

Monetary sources in Paris said France did not bid in the auction, although it had purchased substantial quantities in earlier I.M.F. sales. French dealers reported that speculators had sold gold short in anticipation of lower auction prices than those that were realized.

In Bern, Switzerland, a source at the Swiss National Bank said it did not participate in the sale because it feared Dollar Mixed in Europe.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 16 (UPI)—The dollar, which suffered sharp losses Wednesday, was mixed on European money markets today as dealers said there was renewed speculation that the West German mark would be revalued after Germany's general election next month.

The dollar was down in Frankfurt to 2.4825 marks from 2.4850, and it also fell in Paris, closing at 4.8870 francs against 4.8970 yesterday.

However, the dollar rose in Zurich, closing at 2.4745 Swiss francs against 2.4687 in Brussels to 39,5150 francs from 39,4450 in Amsterdam to 2,6330 guilders from 2,5935 and in Milan to 840.90 lire from 840.70.

CHEMICAL BANK OFFERING RATE CUTS ON SECURITIES

Chemical Bank said yesterday it would introduce a discount securities service on a test basis for about 19,000 checking account customers in six mid-Manhattan offices. It said the bank would charge a $30-a-year membership fee and a flat $35 for orders of stock up to 500 shares. Orders of 501 to 1,000 shares would cost $55.

The move, although long expected, could precipitate rate cuts for individual investors by brokerage firms—if the Chemical test proves to be a success. But as one leading broker put it, "We're not sure what kind of competition Chemical is yet."

So far only a handful of brokers are discounting commission rates for individual clients. Earlier this week, Muriel F. Siebert, president of Muriel Siebert & Company, cut traditional rates by 50 percent.

Many brokers can match Chemical's fees on stock selling as high as $18 or $19. The bank plan becomes attractive, they say, above that level. Several maintain, however, that brokerage firms offer other services that make their fees attractive. Citicorp, the Bankers' Trust Company and Chase Manhattan Bank said they had no plans for a similar service.

Rail Freight Traffic Down 7.6%. WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—The Association of American Railroads reported today that freight traffic on United States railroads during the Labor Day holiday week totaled an estimated 13.8 billion ton-miles, 7.8 percent below the year-earlier level. Carloadings in the same period totaled 425,685 cars, off 11.7 percent from last year, which was also affected by wildcat coal strikes. The American Trucking Associations Inc. reported intercity truck tonnage was down 3.6 percent from last year.

himself had informed the board of his failure to file "until recently personal income tax returns—Federal, New York State and local—for the years 1971 through 1975."

Mr. Conrad himself submitted a five-paragraph statement to the board in which he placed his total Federal income tax obligation for the five-year period at $704,292.

He reported further that he had since filed and paid state and local taxes with interest, noting that these "represented greater amounts as a consequence of small withholding by the employer."

On June 2, Mr. Conrad was elected to the post of chairman in addition to his role as president. At that time the board gave him a new three-year contract and raised his salary by $25,000 to $300,000 a year.

In his statement to the RCA board, Mr. Conrad said that the filing of the late tax returns had resulted in a showing of overpayments of taxes in three of the years in question.

Resignation Accepted

The board said that it had decided to accept Mr. Conrad's resignation and to postpone the stock offering "purely" because of his financial problems.

RCA's net income for the three months ended June 30 soared 100.4 percent to $53.7 million, or 70 cents a share.

The selection of Mr. Griffiths to replace Mr. Conrad would appear to perpetuate the "palace revolt" that brought about the totally unexpected resignation of Mr. Sarnoff last Nov. 5.

Both Mr. Conrad and Mr. Griffiths were members of that top management office as well as board members. Trade sources said that Mr. Griffiths' selection to head the company's electronics and diversified businesses represented the board's decision to try to eliminate profit declines.

He was named to that post in September 1975. His salary was listed in the 1976 annual meeting proxy as $173,300 a year.

The sudden departure of Mr. Sarnoff from his post as chief executive of the company marked the first time since its founding that there was no member of the Sarnoff family in its top echelon.

CONGRESS APPROVES BILL ON TAX REVISION

applies to upper-income taxpayers who make use of various tax "shelters," or preferences, and large regular deductions.

The change will increase from 30,000 to about 300,000 the number of persons subject to the tax and will raise an estimated $1 billion in added revenues.

In addition, restrictions on various preferences, such as real estate and oil drilling investments, were tightened in varying degrees, though not by as much as in the original House bill.

One provision of the 1975 package, an increase in both the minimum and maximum standard deduction for taxpayers who do not itemize their deductions, was made permanent and will not need further extension by Congress.

2,600 Walk Out at Sperry Rand After Talks on New Contract Fail. LAKE SUCCESS, L.I., Sept. 16—Work on defense contracts at the Sperry Division of the Sperry Rand Corporation was halted today when 2,600 employees walked out after the union and the company were unable to agree on a new contract.

Among the many provisions of the tax bill are these changes affecting individual taxpayers. Deductions for vacation homes that are rented part-time will be tightened. The tax form will have simpler tables and will show several other changes.

Digest of Tax Bill Passed by Cong

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—Following is a digest of the tax law approved by Congress today and sent to President Ford.

Individual Taxpayers

1. Tax Cut. There is no new general tax reduction, but the bill extends through 1977 the anti-recession tax cut enacted in 1975 and slightly expanded for 1976.

2. Child Care. The bill converts the present deduction for child care expenses to a tax credit. This means relatively more tax saving in the lower income brackets and also means that the tax saving will be available to those who do not itemize deductions.

3. Sick Pay. This long-standing tax deduction is eliminated, starting this year. Until the change, the first $100 of weekly pay maintained by an employer when an employee was out sick, after a waiting period, was free of tax to the sick employee.

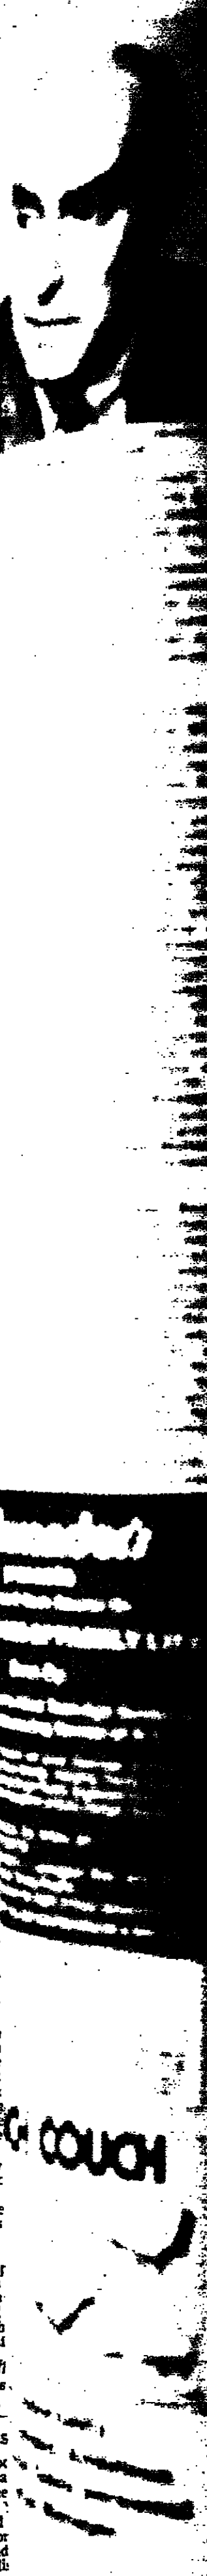

4. Alimony. Those who make alimony payments will get a deduction even if they do not itemize deductions generally.

5. Use of part of the home for business purposes. The rules are greatly tightened, and hundreds of thousands of taxpayers will lose this deduction.

6. Wagering. There will be a withholding tax of 20 percent on large gambling winnings. While the actual regulations are still uncertain, withholding will apparently apply to winnings of more than $1,000 at a race track when the odds are 300 to 1 or more, and to winnings from state lotteries of more than $5,000.

7. Working for a United States employer in a foreign country. The exemption from United States tax is significantly tightened and more tax will be due to the United States Treasury for those earning more than $15,000.

8. Retirement credit. This obsolete and complicated provision, which now helps very few persons over 65, was brought up to date and will help more of them, but not by much. Those who have relatively high Social Security benefits have been unable to use this provision before and will be unable to use it now.

Estate and G

The new bill contains reforms in this area since 194

1. Exemption. The exempt estate tax is doubled next year and rises to $175,000 after Special provisions on value date and the deadline for estate tax provide additional relief for farms and small business.

2. Marital deduction. Up of an estate can go to a 5 tax. Now it is half the estate.

3. Integration. The estate are "integrated" with a single but small gifts of $3,000 a for a married couple) will be tax-free.

4. Generation-skipping. Method of avoiding estate tax is a trust for grandchildren $250,000 for each child of the trust, regardless of the grandchildren.

5. Carryover basis. Start value of assets at the begin year, heirs will have to count for inherited stocks or other capital gains purposes, the change price by the person estate. At present, the heir's "basis" as of the date the value might have increased asset was purchased. As an the change, if a man now $ stock for $50,000 next year risen in value to $100,000 20 years from now, his heir be $50,000, not $100,000, and much more capital gains tax in the stock. This change will years to have full practical effect.

Miscellaneous

1. Boycott. The bill provides for companies providing Arab boycott of Israel, though work in practice is not yet clear.

2. Internal Revenue Service. When advisory rulings are issued, the rulings must be those who ask for them, with the taxpayer involved decisions would increase the quality of tax returns.

3. Business and professional liability. There will be provisions on the tax deductions for travel and expenses for the business.

4. Foreign bank deposits. Foreigners in United States exempt from the withholding tax that applies to other foreign here. This exemption, periodic in the past, would be made permanent.

5. Foundations. The present changes in several technical provisions, including a reduction in the pe assets that must be paid out by employers to prepaid legal services. The bill would make the credit available to these industries.

6. Small corporations. A tax reduction on the first $50,000 of corporate profits, enacted last year as part of the anti-recession package, was extended through 1977.

7. Minimum tax. The minimum tax, designed mainly for individuals, applies also to corporations that are able to use special tax preferences to greatly reduce their tax. It was toughened for corporations, including financial institutions, to the tune of about $50 million this year rising to $200 million five years from now.

8. Overseas earnings. The basic foreign tax credit, which reduces United States taxes by the amount of foreign taxes paid, was left intact. But now all foreign taxes must be lumped together, ending the former "per country" treatment and raising some additional United States revenue.

9. DISC. The tax benefit for exporting, though establishment of Domestic International Sales Corporations, were reduced by about a third—$400 million in fiscal 1977—by applying the benefit only to export increases over a base period.

10. ESOP's. Last year, in a temporary experiment, Congress granted an extra one percent bonus on top of a percent investment tax credits that establish Employee Ownership Plans, in which workers own shares in the company. These plans are somewhat but the new bill extends the investment credit bonus for years. It allows an additional percent bonus if the contribution to the plan is matched from the employees.

A related story on the effect of new tax bill on investors in companies appears on Page D15.

NEW YORK CITY ACTS ON TAX DELINQUENTS

Council Approves Bills to Speed Collection of $220 Million Owed in Levies on Realty

By EDWARD RANZAN Legislation designed to speed collection of $220 million in delinquent real estate taxes owed New York City was approved yesterday by the City Council. The measures, which would go into effect Jan. 1, are expected to be signed into law shortly by Mayor Beame.

The Council also adopted three important rules changes. They involve public disclosure of names, salaries and responsibilities of all Council employees; the discharging of legislation bottled up in committee to the full Council for action, and permitting the public to testify at Council committee hearings on appointments of officials.

The Council approved overwhelmingly bills that would increase the rate of interest on unpaid real estate taxes to 15 percent from 12 percent for parcels whose annual tax bill is more than $2,000, and future interest rates would be set at 6 percent above the prime lending rate fixed by commercial banks. It also imposed the same interest provision for nonpayment of water bills and added a requirement that the city establish a reserve fund of at least 7.5 percent of anticipated real estate taxes to compensate for uncollectible real estate taxes.

But the bill that cut from three years to one year the time that the city could move to foreclose on delinquent properties was bitterly contested by a number of Councilmen. They contended that this would be "disastrous" for many owners of many small homes who have been hard hit by the recession. The measure was adopted by a vote of 26 to 11. Councilman Michael DeMarco said that many of his Bronx constituents were construction workers who owned small homes. "Right now," he said, "many are unemployed, but give them time and they will pay their taxes." He added that the one-year foreclosure provision would jeopardize their life savings.

Vehemently disagreeing with the minority, Councilman Edward L. Sadovsky, Democrat of Queens and the principal sponsor of the legislation, said that small homeowners would have no difficulty in working out tax delinquencies with the city.

More importantly he said, was the fact that experience had shown that when foreclosure proceedings were instituted after three years, 75 percent of landlords in arrears paid up. He added that the city would now be able to collect up to $160 million of the delinquent taxes after one year rather than waiting at least three years.

Councilman Leon Katz, Democrat of Brooklyn, who led the opposition, contended that the legislation would lead to abandonment of many commercial properties. He said the city was in no position to take over and run these properties. The Council also passed a bill to restore tax abatements for rehabilitation work on a number of cooperative-housing projects, many of which were built at least 30 years ago, and a measure to permit the city's Taxi and Limousine Commission to license official taxicab-inspection stations throughout the city.

Frank Shorter, Olympic marathon medalist, talking about the five-borough marathon to make place Oct. 24. Percy Shorter, Manhattan Borough President, stands next to map that shows start in Staten Island and finish in Manhattan.

Politicians Jump Marathon Gun

By NEIL AMDUR
New York City Marathon got a false start yesterday, but it surprised the starter or the star.

The starter was Mayor Beame, who in his borough presidents get the honor because his gun wouldn't fire. It was Percy Shorter, the Olympic marathon champion and medalist in 1976, who has lost a reputation of battles with politicians in his years. When he started the event, I didn't know they were going to cheat, he said. "They did, and they won."

26-mile, 335-yard marathon through the five boroughs on Oct. 24. A total of 1,168 competitors from 34 states, including 70 women, already have filed entries. To lend further credibility to this first citywide event, the sponsoring New York Road Runners Club flew in Shorter from his home in Boulder, Colo. "I just want to show up and see how the police will clear the streets," Shorter said, confirming his entry, along with that of Bill Rodgers, another United States Olympian and the 1975 Boston Marathon champion. "That alone will be an achievement."

"When they get to Queens," said Donald Manes, "I'm sure some people will quit the race and buy a house." Mayor Beame said the cooperation of the Borough Presidents and a $25,000 gift from the family of the late Samuel Rudin, a former marathoner, represented "just another thing to show New York's not going down the drain." Shorter, who has run marathons all over the world, was intrigued by the idea of returning particularly if Kenyans and Ethiopians, who did not compete in Montreal, decide to enter. "They've got a built-in crowd," said the former Yale athlete, who is opening a shoe store and settling into his law practice in Boulder. "It'll be interesting to see how many people are going to watch. People are going to come by just to find out why the cops are closing down the streets."

Bettors' Tax Is Tightened By Congress

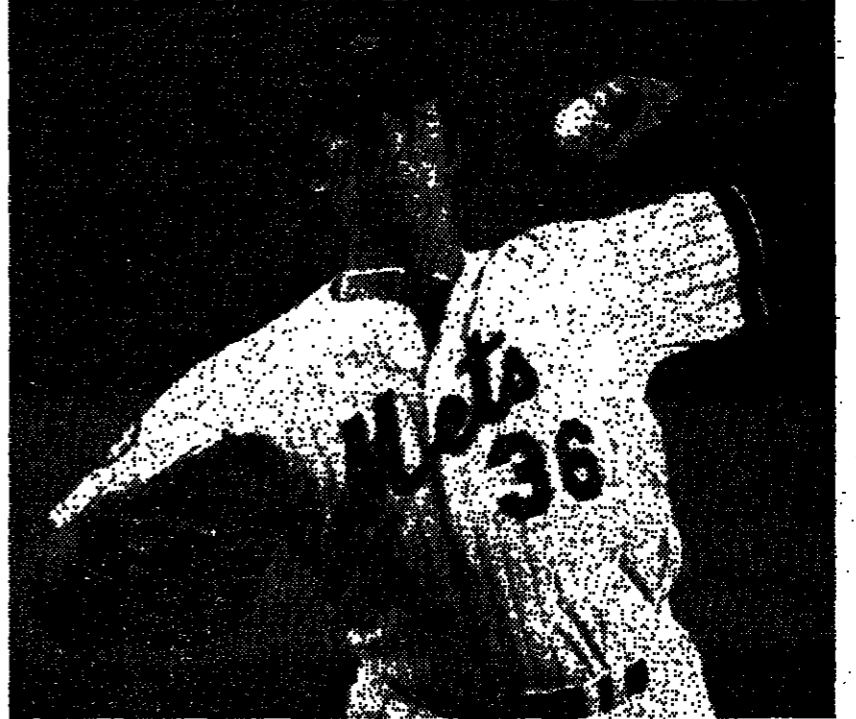

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 (AP)—Congress passed and sent to the President today legislation that increases by millions of dollars the taxes paid by investors in professional sports franchises. The measure also requires that a person who wins $1,000 or more on a single horse race or at least $5,000 in a lottery must pay a 20 percent withholding tax immediately to the Internal Revenue Service.

Under the terms of the bill, the amount that can be allocated to player contracts by purchase of a sports franchise could not exceed the amount of the sales price allocated to these contracts by the seller. There also would be a presumption that no more than half the price would be allocated to player contracts unless the buyer showed the Government it was proper to allocate more than half the amount. Typically, Congressional tax experts said, a buyer of sports teams tries to allocate as much as possible of the total purchase price of a franchise to the player contracts, since the cost of these may be depreciated over the useful life of the player.

Koosman Gets 20th, And Fans 13 Cards

Jerry Koosman, the New York Mets' star pitcher over the second half of the season, sought his 20th victory last night at Shea Stadium against St. Louis. Koosman was opposed by Pete Falcone, a Cardinals' left-hander who had won six of his last eight games for a 12-13 record. Koosman got the 20th victory and struck out 13 Cardinals as the Mets won, 4-1. He became the second National League pitcher to win 20 this year, joining Randy Jones of the San Diego Padres.

Cardinals' Falcone became Koosman's 19th victim last Saturday in Busch Stadium when Jerry held the Cardinals to 2 hits in a 4-1 victory. He allowed one unearned run and fanned five. If there were any thoughts of no-hit games, they were dispelled early for both Koosman and Falcone. The Cardinals pitcher gave up a clean single to left to Felix Millan with one out in the first. Koosman yielded a single to right in the second to Mike Anderson.

Reds Defeat Dodgers, 4-2; 'Magic Number' Drops to 4

CINCINNATI, Sept. 16 (AP)—Don Gullett, regaining his 1975 form after a month of inactivity, triumphed in his second straight start tonight, beating the Los Angeles Dodgers for the first time in two years, 4-2. The victory reduced Cincinnati's "magic number" for clinching the National League West pennant to four.

that erased a 2-0 Dodger lead. Doug Rau was the losing pitcher. The Reds have a 12-game lead with 14 games remaining. Pete Rose had two hits for the Reds, giving him 199 for the season and leaving him on the verge of his eighth 200-hit season. Ty Cobb is the only major leaguer who had more. He had nine.

Finley's Free Agents Go to Bat

Charles O. Finley, owner of the Oakland A's, speaking Tuesday night at University of Rhode Island in Kingston

BOSTON, Sept. 16—A 33-year-old lawyer who has been the road seven days a week for four years will place a phone call some time tomorrow from Providence, R.I., to sign and make baseball history. The call will go from Jerry Kapstein to Charles O. Finley, owner and emperor of the Oakland A's, and in it Kapstein will report the results of five separate but related negotiations. At stake is the legal status of Joe Rudi, Gene Fingers, Gene Tenace, Don Baylor and Bert Campaneris, who represent 20 percent of the manpower and most of the elite talent of Finley's ball club. All are playing out their contract options, and the question to be answered in the fateful phone call is this: Do they accept Finley's latest terms?

Finley is not the stars of baseball's first annual meeting of free agents? It is urgent because the regular season ends in two weeks, and that's when unsigned players start becoming free to sell themselves in the marketplace. After that, there are three dates to keep in mind: Nov. 1 is the last time an unsigned player may talk business with his former team; Oct. 4 is when the 24 teams in the major leagues begin to "draft" the unsigned talent in a more or less orderly process roughly as ridiculous as Marie Antoinette's argument to organize the French Revolution. And Nov. 8 is when a Federal judge in Chicago will open Finley's $10 million lawsuit against the commissioner of baseball, Bowie Kuhn.

Summit at the Swimming Pool
For a long time, Charley Finley pretended that Jerry Kapstein didn't exist. But that wasn't easy because Kapstein, a time Navy lawyer, represents 50 of the 600 players in big leagues plus some football, hockey and basketball players, and even two broadcasters. He may have more clients in baseball than Bowie Kuhn or even Marvin Miller.

Danny, 'My Finley Expert'
"He was frank, and we made our points. Then I flew to Baltimore to negotiate with the Orioles for Ross Grimsley, and he signed. Then I came over here to see the Phillies about Dave Cash. Then I'll head back to Rhode Island and call the five guys in Oakland, one at a time, about half an hour apiece. I told Charley I'd take a couple of days and I'd call him Friday. Sure, things are moving toward a resolution, but I don't know how or when."

66's by Pooley And Edwards Lead by Stroke

MASON, Ohio, Sept. 16 (AP)—Danny Edwards and Don Pooley, a rookie, nonwinners on the tour, gained the limelight from their more heralded opposition, as they fashioned four-under-par 66's today and shared the first round lead in the $150,000 Ohio-Kings Island open.

ley and Moynihan, at Meeting, Agree Mostly on Aid to Cities reached tacit agreement on their discussion—a heavy liability redoubt of a college seminar—and explicit agreement had won.

Mr. Moynihan, who has said he opposes abortion but does not favor the amendment, said he was "very troubled" by the Federal action.

On aid to the cities, Mr. Moynihan said that the plight of New York had been so great that the question "attained the condition of a moral choice."

Mr. Buckley said "that such an automatic guarantee of city debt would have removed 'pressures for good management.'"

But for the most part, with Mr. Buckley leaning his chin on his right hand and Mr. Moynihan leaning his chin on his left, they politely agreed on the right for public figures to have private lives.

Mr. Buckley said "that such an automatic guarantee of city debt would have removed 'pressures for good management.'"

Who won? "Morality won," said Mr. Moynihan, rolling his eyes and hurrying away to the Governor's office.

Legally Parked Cars Ticketed, Assemblyman Says

Assemblyman Charles E. Schumer of Brooklyn, said that parking enforcement agents are pressured into giving out tickets to drivers who don't deserve them.

Theodore Karageuzoff, Commissioner of the Transportation Administration, which supervises the Parking Violations Bureau, denied that agents were "pressured or harassed to write a certain number of summonses."

On different occasions I might use this tactic or write a ticket for a legally parked car, said one of the men. "It depended on how badly I needed a summons."

All three said they had never complained about the system to their superiors or tried to circumvent the chain of command because they feared retaliation.

One agent, interviewed yesterday while he was working in his Manhattan area, called the charges of a "quota system" absurd and said he knew of no widespread falsifying of parking summonses.

He called the standards of productivity he had to meet "a fair standard that compares me with my peers" hounded on the screen by backlighting, said that at one time or another they had felt pressured to give out an illegal summons or were ordered to do so by a supervisor.

Mr. Karageuzoff, as well, defended the system saying that it was not an arbitrary citywide standard and that it varied from area to area depending on what agents had done themselves.

If after several periods of supervision the productivity continued to rise and then fall, he said, there was a presumption "that something is wrong."

The three agents at the news conference at 270 Broadway talked of more subtle injustices in what they called the "quotas" system.

Mr. Schurmer said that he would attempt to get the bureau to consider additional factors in measuring productivity to come up with a fairer yardstick.

U.N. Sea-Law Conferees Favor New Talks in City in May 1977

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 16—Delegates to the sea-law conference agreed tentatively today to hold another session in New York beginning next May in hopes of breaking a deadlock over ocean-floor mining.

The decision is to be acted on before the ending tomorrow of the current seven-week parity. This fifth session cleared its agenda with many delegates complaining that it had produced no tangible progress in efforts since 1973 to draft a comprehensive maritime treaty.

At issue is the proposal to create an international seabed authority to control exploitation of nickel, manganese and other minerals on the ocean floor.

A COAST COURT BARS SPECIAL ADMISSIONS

California Justices Uphold Ruling Against a Policy That Favors Students in Minority Groups

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 16—In a landmark decision today, the California Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional a program favoring students from minority groups for admission to state medical schools.

The decision would invalidate admission programs based on any racial quota systems.

Primarily affected by the ruling would be medical and law schools, which have attempted to deal with the intense competition for admission in recent years by setting up such programs to achieve racial balance in their entering classes.

The 6-1 decision resulted from a lawsuit filed by Allan Bakke, a white student who had charged the University of California with "reverse discrimination" because he was refused admission in favor of other, less-qualified applicants.

Mr. Bakke applied for and was denied admission to the medical school of the University of California at Davis in 1973 and 1974. During each of those years only 100 students—out of approximately 3,000 applicants—were admitted.

The lawsuit charged that Mr. Bakke was discriminated against on the basis of race in violation of the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment.

Issue Declared moot

The state Supreme Court affirmed the lower court ruling today, but returned the case to that court to determine whether Mr. Bakke would have been admitted to the school in the absence of the special admissions program.

The Bakke case has been closely watched by educators across the country because it deals with the controversial issue of "reverse discrimination" in school admissions.

In its ruling today, the California Supreme Court held that the special admissions program violates constitutional rights of nonminority applicants "because it affords preference on the basis of race to persons who, by the university's own standards, are not as qualified for the study of medicine as the nonminority applicants denied admission."

Other Remedies Suggested

The court added, "The principle that the Constitution sanctions racial discrimination against a race—any race—is a dangerous concept fraught with potential for misuse in situations which involve far less laudable objectives than are manifest in the present case."

The court emphasized that the university need not make decisions on admissions based solely on the basis of academic grades, and could take into consideration the disadvantaged background of an applicant, so long as admission standards are applied in a racially neutral fashion.

The court noted that the problems of admission for disadvantaged students might be remedied in other ways if the university instituted "aggressive programs" to identify, recruit and provide remedial schooling for disadvantaged students of all races who are interested in pursuing a medical career and have an evident talent for doing so.

In the only dissenting opinion, Justice Matthew O. Tobriner wrote "As a practical matter, racial classifications frequently must be employed if effects of past discrimination and exclusion are to be overcome and if integration of currently segregated institutions is to be achieved."
